

Hospitals ignore edict, refuse abortions: study

by PATRICIA MCCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 80 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii, New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz, Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (89 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

Neighbors attack plan for condo

by NANCY GOTLER

Left to the quiet peacefulness of the West Campbell Street community in Arlington Heights where they have reared families and spent most of their lives.

But if a developer's plans to raze three homes on the block to build a four-story, 80-unit condominium building go much further, the usually calm Mrs. Csanadi and her neighbors may revolt.

"LET'S FACE it, building a condominium is big business," said Mrs. Csanadi, a retired school principal who taught in Palatine for 43 years. "But what about the people who have spent their lives here. Don't they count?"

Mrs. Csanadi and her husband, Steve, have lived on the block between Ridge and Mitchell avenues at 502 W. Campbell St. since 1929. They don't want to see a construction project alter the quaint neighborhood where they have spent their adult lives.

"It's nothing but blockbusting," she said. "Profiteering of the most base motive. All that will come out of it is that someone will make a million bucks at our expense."

That someone is Chicago developer Ed Dick, who wants village officials to rezone three lots in the center of the block for his project.

"MOST OF the residents' complaints aren't justified," Dick said. "Often they are based on personality and not reason. They complain about the 40-foot height of the project but there are some homes on the street that I'll venture to say are higher than our building will be and nobody ever complained about them."

But Mrs. Csanadi holds fast to her opposition. "There are vacant apartments in Arlington Heights now and all kinds of land available that's already zoned for what he wants. The question is, why put it here?"

Dick said he chose the site because it is near the area included in the village's 30-year plan to ring the central business district with high-rise, multi-family dwellings.

"I'm the first to suggest using this area so I'm criticized for it," he said.

"But I only pursued this on the basis that if Arlington Heights spent time and money on its long-range plan, they must have thought it was important."

"WHAT AM I supposed to do?" Dick asked. "Wait 29 years and then start building before the 30-year plan runs out?"

Dick has an option to buy the homes at 411, 413 and 417 W. Campbell St. Their owners could not be reached for comment.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters hail it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for higher-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 18 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.

- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.

- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause adverse reactions among some patients.

"REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

"The drug company takes responsibility," he says.

Pharmacists wary of state bill

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap opera between classes and even take courses in "sudology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and

Ads, Boy Scouts used to find kids

Gay's child sex ring discovered

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — It started with a 1974 newspaper advertisement for young boys of the Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn type to pose for fishing photographs for pay.

The ad appeared as innocent as the formation of a Boy Scout troop, but combined they led to the creation of a homosexual ring using young boys from New Orleans and involving men from as far away as California, Illinois and Florida, according to Dist. Atty. Harry Connick.

Seventeen men have been charged in the case so far and Connick said at least 25 boys, most of them under 16, were used in the ring. The district attorney said he doesn't know where it will stop.

"I'VE GOT TO BELIEVE that a network exists for the supplying of children," Connick said.

Several men involved allegedly tried to become associated with the Big Brothers of New Orleans organization. All but one were rejected because of the Big Brother's screening process.

But Connick said Dale Edmunds, an offshore oil worker from Metairie, La., used an alias to circumvent the screening and became a counselor for the program for fatherless boys. Edmunds has been charged with seven counts of aggravated crime against nature for the alleged sexual abuse of two 14-year-old boys.

Attention has been focused on child pornography and the sexual abuse of young boys by recent revelations in several major cities and congressional hearings on child pornography.

Connick said the men involved in the New Orleans case may have communicated through the pornographic magazines.

THE RING WAS discovered last year when police found out about photographs of the boys being processed in the city.

So far, one man has been sentenced. Raymond T. Woodall, 38, one of the Scout leaders, was convicted of 11 counts of aggravated crime against nature and given a 75-year sentence last week by Judge Oliver Schulingkamp.

"The facts show that the defendant Raymond Thomas Woodall cunningly . . . exploited the naivete, ignorance and/or situational status of the respective parents of the victims," the judge said.

"He took advantage and used — for his own unlawful, lustful and contorted purposes — a great, useful and wholesome American institution, namely, the Boy Scouts of America."

Village to discuss new boundary line

Wheeling and Buffalo Grove officials will discuss the establishment of a boundary between the two villages near the Chevy Chase Golf Course when they meet tonight in a joint session. Buffalo Grove officials said they intend to fight Wheeling's efforts to annex 406 acres in Vernon Township, including the 128-acre golf course at 1003 N. Milwaukee Ave.

The Wheeling Park District is purchasing the golf course. Buffalo Grove trustees said allowing Wheeling to annex the area would hinder future attempts by Buffalo Grove to expand its tax base through industrial development. Wheeling Park District residents in March approved a $3.7 million bond issue to purchase the course from the William Johnson family.

Panel to discuss hiring freeze

The Mount Prospect Village Board will discuss a possible freeze on hiring new employees for the 1977-78 fiscal year when it meets tonight in a special session. Department directors who asked for additional personnel, approved by the former village board, have been asked to review their requests with new board members.

Mayor Carolyn H. Krause and Trustee Norma J. Murauskis did not serve on the former village board, which adopted a $12.1 million budget, including funds for 17 new employees. The hiring freeze was proposed by Trustee Leo Floros, who pledged during his successful reelection campaign to "hold the line" on village spending.

She takes business problem to top

DENVER (UPI) — Budding businesswoman Angela Valentine learned early to go straight to the top.

"Dear Governor Lamm," the third-grader said in a letter to Gov. Richard Lamm, "I am trying to have a lemonade stand and popcorn wagon this summer. I am eight years old almost nine. My father tells me I have to collect sales tax and pay it to the state. Is this right? What does the state do with the tax money. What other taxes do I have to pay?"

"Please answer soon."

Lamm telephoned Angela at her home in Fort Collins last week to deliver the reply personally. He followed up with a letter which let Angela off the tax hook.

"What I am saying, Angela, is that I do not believe the law requires children to collect sales tax at lemonade stands. There might be some people who disagree with me. If any state official questions you about taxes, you let me know. I am a lawyer and I would be proud to personally represent you in this matter," he said.

Staged train holdup too real for some

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (UPI) — Operators of the Gold Coast Railroad, a tourist attraction, forgot to tell police when they decided to stage a fake, old-tie holdup to thrill passengers.

Two masked bandits, wearing cowboy hats and waving real-looking pistols, boarded an ancient steam engine Sunday and startled about 75 passengers as they chased the conductor through three cars, corralled him in the baggage car and made off with the "loot" on foot.

Citizens' band radio operators saw the action and called police. So did bystanders in a shopping center near the airport where the train pulled up. They deluged the sheriff's office with phone calls.

Sheriff's deputies roared up, blocked the train's departure and began questioning those aboard.

"We thought we'd give the passengers a little thrill," said Jesse Hollahan, president of the railroad club, a group of hobbyists dedicated to preserving steam railroading. "I guess it looked too real."

Accidents claim 23 lives during holiday

by United Press International
A little boy was crushed to death, a girl softball player was killed by lightning and a small girl drowned while fishing in a farm pond — part of the fatalities which marred Illinois' Memorial Day weekend.

A UPI count of Illinois accidents Monday showed at least 18 persons died in traffic, four persons drowned and lightning took one life.

The lightning fatality was Kelly Hogan, 13, who was struck while pitching a softball game in Springfield Saturday. She died Sunday.

Drowning victims included: Julie Ann Siebold, 13, Modoc, in the Kaskaskia River.

Randy Rettel, 22, Boubonnais, in a strip mine pit near Braidwood.

Gisa Bullwinkle, 4, Hinsdale, in a farm pond near De Kalb.

Charles Carter, 23, Springfield, in the Kaskaskia River near the Lake Shelbyville Dam.

Among the traffic victims was Chad E. Edmonds, 1½, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Edmonds, Milan, who was crushed beneath the wheels of a car near Geneseo Sunday. The car driver, Danny West, East Moline, had stopped to speak to the boy's grandfather when the boy crawled beneath the car.

Among other traffic deaths were: Willard Strohnigal, a hit-and-run victim in Summit.

David Kiel, 21, Sharon, Wis., near Crystal Lake.

William Martin, 17, Franklin Park.

Michael Armstrong, 23, Streamwood.

Michael Brichetto, 22, Chicago.

James Clark, 28, Chicago.

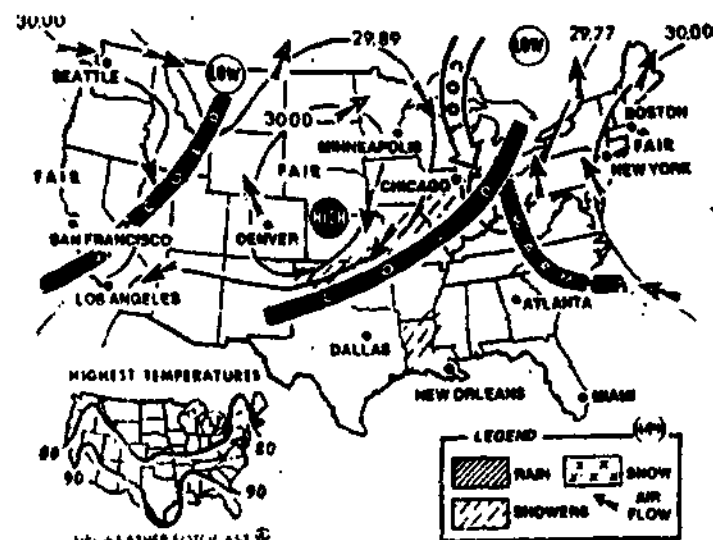

Bowen Eichelberger, Acola.

A late national count showed 353 deaths with the heaviest driving period still ahead.

Ashes sifted for clue in nightclub fire

SOUTHGATE, Ky. (UPI) — Investigators took stretchers into the rain-soaked ashes of the Beverly Hills Supper Club again Monday, this time to retrieve melted fiber glass that could help track a clue that a flaming basement oil generator touched off the fire and panic that killed at least 160 persons.

Kentucky State Police Commissioner Ken Brandenburg said officials had found no evidence arson was behind the Saturday night blaze, which filled the sprawling "Showplace of the Midwest" with thick, black smoke.

Jim Lanagan, demolition superintendent, said he was "almost positive" there were no more victims in the debris.

THE DEATH search was briefly halted Monday afternoon as officials went after the fiber glass, then shifted equipment including a bulldozer and 100-foot crane to a different section of the rambling building.

Besides the dead, another 74 persons were injured in the smoky fire. Eleven were treated and released and the other 63 were listed in conditions ranging from fair to critical.

It's a good sign not finding any more purses or clothing," said Southgate Mayor Ken Paul. "That makes us believe we won't find any more bodies."

Brandenburg said sifting through the ruins and interviewing witnesses would take three to four weeks and it could be that long before the cause of the fire is established.

But one idea, according to Campbell County Coroner Dr. Fred Stine, is that trouble began in an oil-fueled electrical generator beneath the Zebra Room, one of 21 private dining rooms.

STINE SPECULATED, "When they tried to put it out with a fire extinguisher, it blew flames down the hallway to the Cabaret Room," where 3,500 holiday weekend patrons were waiting to hear John Davidson sing.

The club, set atop a knoll across the Ohio River from Cincinnati, was not equipped with a sprinkler system.

Brandenburg also said Monday he had assigned men to prevent any recurrence of the looting that took place briefly in the immediate aftermath of the fire.

Plunderers tried to make off with valuables from corpses waiting to be removed, he said, and three persons were arrested.

In nearby Ft. Thomas, Ky., a special team of FBI agents attempted to identify 49 victims whose badly charred bodies or skeletons were pulled from the ruins.

Agent Stan Czarnecki said seven fingerprint experts had been flown in from Washington.

TOM WALD, Kentucky Deputy Fire Marshall said Monday panic contributed heavily to the casualties.

"If people hadn't panicked, they might have gotten out. In fact, they all might have gotten out," Wald said.

"Panic and pandemonium was the big problem in there," Riesenberger said.

He said most of the "panicking" apparently took place in the Cabaret Room, where about 1,000 persons awaited Davidson's show.

"I talked to people in other parts of the building and they got out okay," Wald said.

Benny Bucako, a bartender at the club, said a receptionist told him a fire had broken out in the Zebra Room.

Head bartender Tommy Behle grabbed a fire extinguisher, but when he tried to put out the fire there was a blast: "hat blew the doors out," Bucako said.

"There apparently was an explosion in the basement, in fact two explosions," said Kentucky Gov. Julian Carroll.

Moluccan solution not yet in sight: Dutch officials

by RUTH E. GRUBER

ASSEN, Netherlands (UPI) — South Moluccan terrorists offered Monday to leave behind 60 hostages if they are flown out of Holland, but a solution to the eight-day siege "is not yet in sight," Dutch officials said.

The offer represented a major concession by the gunmen, who first wanted to take the hostages with them. But Justice Minister Dries Van Agt cautioned, "The problem is how much weight can we attach to what the terrorists say."

"Our talks with them are sometimes rather emotional," he said, referring to talks over field telephones with the gunmen, who hold 56 hostages aboard a train near Groningen in northern Holland and four teachers in an elementary school in Bovensmilde, 19 miles away.

An indication the two terrorist groups may have had a falling out came Monday when a government spokesman said a faulty telephone link between the train and the school is not being repaired because it is not certain they "want to get in touch with each other."

Since the twin takeovers last Monday, the gunmen have demanded the release of 21 South Moluccan comrades, jailed for earlier terrorist activity, and a plane to take themselves, the prisoners and the hostages out of the country.

But Mrs. Toos Faber, a spokeswoman for the Justice Ministry, said, "They have dropped the demand that the hostages should leave with them to a destination abroad." She said they had been prepared for days to drop the demand.

OFFICIALS SAID the gunmen also had dropped specific reference to a Boeing 747 for any trip out of the country.

It was the second major concession by the gunmen in three days. On Friday, the gunmen in Bovensmilde released more than 100 children from the elementary school after the young hostages picked up a contagious illness.

Mrs. Faber said the gunmen still demand the release of the Moluccan prisoners, but said negotiations now centered on how the hostages would be released.

She said one possibility was an exchange at the airport in Amsterdam.

"THESE PEOPLE are making very concrete demands," she said. "They know what they want."

Premier Joop den Uyl, who has been leading virtually nonstop emergency cabinet meetings since the sieges began, had repeatedly refused to let the hostages out of the country.

In the Hague, the government said it still had not been told where the gunmen wanted to go and that it would be impossible to find a crew to fly them until a specific country was named.

Later, senior Dutch officials said if the gunmen agreed to leave their weapons behind, it might be possible to find a crew to fly them abroad.

THE TWO TERRORIST bands — aboard the train and in the schools — were in contact with the Assen government crisis center by separate field telephones.

Mrs. Faber said the gunmen appeared even more determined than the Moluccans who hijacked a train and seized the Indonesian consulate in Amsterdam 17 months ago. Four hostages died in those attacks. The gunmen, members of the 35,000-strong Moluccan community, are trying to pressure the Dutch government to support their bid for independence for their Asian homeland, the former Spice Islands.

Indonesia took control of the islands following the pullout of Dutch colonial troops more than 25 years ago.

'Consumers pay nuclear overruns'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Environmentalists charged Monday that nuclear power is economical only because state utility commissions make electricity consumers pay for cost overruns and shutdowns at atomic power plants.

In a new handbook spelling out ways to fight atomic power, the Environmental Action Foundation said citizens can effectively challenge the economics of nuclear reactors as well as such traditional issues as plant safety and location.

"We need an honest reassessment of nuclear power's economics before we plunge into . . . an ambitious expansion program," said Richard Morgan, author of the new book. He noted President Carter's energy plan calls for increased reliance on atomic energy.

THE 98-PAGE HANDBOOK, titled "Nuclear Power: The Bargain We Can't Afford," said economic challenges already have slowed reactor development in Maine and Iowa and have provided safeguards for consumers in Pennsylvania and Alabama. The EPF is a private, non-profit environmental action group based in Washington.

Morgan, author of several other books on consumer challenges to electric utilities, said that when a reactor is shut down unexpectedly, most state commissions allow utilities to charge consumers for the costs of alternative power sources.

"Most utilities can generate their own replacement power at an idle coal- or oil-fired plant, but at a substantial increase in fuel costs," he said.

"The fuel clause permits a utility to pass these increased costs to its customers immediately. Without this provision, the cost of replacement fuel would be absorbed by the utility's stockholders — at least until the next rate increase is permitted."

MORGAN SAID nuclear generators are out of service about 40 per cent of the time, more than twice the outage rate for coal-fired plants.

He said atomic power plants have shown average cost overruns of about 100 per cent, citing the Boston Edison Pilgrim reactor near Plymouth Rock, Mass., which had a $65 million price tag when it was announced in 1967 but cost $239 million to build.

Consumers should not have to pay for the overruns, Morgan said.

He said the Pennsylvania Utility Commission in 1976 prohibited Metropolitan Edison and Pennsylvania Electric from charging customers for a $9 million construction error at one reactor, while the same year the Alabama Public Service Commission ruled that Alabama Power could not include in its rate base 25 per cent of the costs for a reactor that exceeded earlier estimates.

Maine and Iowa commissions have required utilities planning new generating plants to file detailed information on anticipated costs, reliability, adequacy of fuel supply, waste disposal plants, power needs and alternatives considered.

Morgan said the strict regulations prompted utilities in both states this year to suspend nuclear projects because of "regulatory uncertainties."

Faithful honor dead; Cody dedicates new mausoleum

by DEBBE JONAK
More than 1,000 Catholics gathered at All Saints Cemetery Monday as John Cardinal Cody dedicated a new 20,000-crypt mausoleum.

Elderly women in Sunday dresses, youths in jeans and youngsters in shorts stood in the field surrounding the building during the ceremony, in which the high church official burned incense.

Cardinal Cody governs 2.5 million Catholics in the Chicago area.

"IT MARKS a step forward in our attempt to honor the dead," he said of the $15 million structure at River and Central roads, Des Plaines.

"Here in this new mausoleum will remain the immortal bodies of those who have chosen to be close to one another . . . even in the quiet of death," he said.

The three-story, marble-faced mausoleum was opened within the past year and already many crypts bear the names of deceased Catholics.

The service was held in a courtyard framed by the building's two wings which house the crypts. Cardinal Cody was dwarfed by the long, narrow stained glass windows of the chapel which constitutes the mausoleum's nucleus.

His voice echoed across the grounds, as the crowd sang and prayed with him.

SOME CAME because relatives are buried in the cemetery. Others came because they plan to be interred in the mausoleum some day. Others wanted to see Cardinal Cody.

"There he is," one girl gasped, holding up her younger sister for a glimpse of the Cardinal.

Cardinal Cody not only cited the day as one for dedication of a new building, but also for memories of the dead.

"Today all over our great nation as we celebrate Memorial Day, parents and friends will be joined in the thought of those who have gone before us," he said.

"The silent cemetery will today cry out with that thought," he said. MEMORIAL DAY for the Catholic Church is a time not only to honor the war dead, but also to remember deceased family members with flowers and prayers.

Cardinal Cody reminded the crowd death is a time of happiness.

"Death is not an end. It is a beginning. We can look forward to our own resurrection (to heaven) on the last day," he said.

After the ceremony, many persons toured the building, pausing at the crypt of a family member or looking for their own future interment site.

Others wandered through the cemetery, kneeling for a moment at the grave of a relative.

"We have family buried here," a Chicago man said. "We've been coming here for 25 years. My mother has been buried here many years and I used to bring my dad. Now he's buried here too."

Jamaicans greet Rosalynn warmly

SHIELDING THEIR EARS against the roar of the jet engines, President Carter and daughter Amy watch as First Lady Rosalynn Carter lifts off from the Brunswick Airport on St. Simons Island, Ga. on the start of a two week goodwill tour of Latin America.

KINGSTON, Jamaica (UPI) — Throngs of flag-waving, smiling schoolchildren Monday lined the streets of Kingston to welcome Rosalynn Carter to Jamaica, the first stop of the First Lady's two-week diplomatic tour of Latin America and the Caribbean.

Mrs. Carter was welcomed by Prime Minister Michael Manley after her Boeing 707 military jet touched down at the Norman Manley International Airport.

Traveling nearly 12 miles from the airport, named after the prime minister's father who occupied the same post nearly two decades ago, Mrs. Carter saw hundreds of broadly smiling uniformed pupils who had been let out of schools to greet the American First Lady.

MANLEY, WHO received Mrs. Carter at the airport with his wife, Beverly, said he was "encouraged by the approaches to international affairs" of the Carter administration. "I am confident we will be able to get along better," the prime minister said.

Mrs. Carter, in her arrival remarks noting Jamaica's role as a leader in the Third World movement, said: "What you are doing here in Jamaica has great significance for all the developing world."

A U.S. official aboard the jet said Mrs. Carter was intent on continuing a warming trend in the U.S.-Jamaican relations evident since the Carter administration took office. "There was an awful lot of bad blood that has to be forgotten," the official said.

Relations deteriorated during the Nixon-Ford years with Manley concerned that Washington was trying to undermine his left-leaning government.

MRS. CARTER reportedly was prepared to extend an offer of aid to Jamaica, whose economy was badly hurt because the banana and tourism industries have been sluggish. But she will not mention a specific dollar amount, U.S. officials said.

Mrs. Carter's visit also is designed to offset Cuba's growing influence in Jamaica. Manley, a close friend of Cuban President Fidel Castro, has steered his government into closer ties with the Third World and Communist nations, particularly Cuba.

En route to Manley's official residence, Mrs. Carter at one point got out of her limousine and walked into the crowd — some 20 deep on both sides of the street — to shake hands, wave and exchange greetings.

The overcast skies and rainy weather did not dampen her welcome. Frequently, loud Jamaican music was blaring out along the route as the crowds took on a holiday spirit.

AT THE PRIME minister's residence, Mrs. Carter chatted for about half an hour with the prime minister and his wife. She signed her name in a special guest book and later had a working lunch with Manley and other government officials.

She later was to pay a courtesy call on Governor-General Florizel Glasspole and his wife and greet the American community here at an embassy reception.

The First Lady got an official send-off at Brunswick AFB, Ga., from President Carter and daughter, Amy, who came to the plane side barefoot.

Cuban signal for better ties seen: Carter

ST. SIMON'S ISLAND, Ga. (UPI) — President Carter said Monday he expects Cuba to signal interest in strengthening diplomatic relations with the United States in the next few weeks, but any move toward harmony will fall "far short of recognition."

He expressed sharp disapproval of Cuba's military "intrusion in Africa."

Nearing the end of a six-day holiday break on Georgia's Golden Isles, Carter discussed Cuba with reporters at the old naval air base for blimps at Glynnco, Ga., where his wife had just departed on a two-week tour of seven Latin nations. Cuba is not among them.

THE PRESIDENT said he did not know how long it would be before the U.S. trade embargo with Cuba would end. He said "it would be a mistake to be too optimistic" about improved relations.

"I think it is established that we want to have good relations with Cuba," Carter said. "We haven't had any firm indication yet that Castro wants to normalize relations with us."

"But I think we will have some indications in the next few weeks of strengthened diplomatic relations with Cuba, far short of recognition."

Carter cited Cuba's 16,000 troops in Angola, 50 military advisers in Ethiopia and other personnel in Mozambique and eight or 10 other countries.

"We would like very much for Cuba to refrain from this intrusion into African affairs in a military way," Carter said.

BUT HE CITED the U.S. fisheries and maritime agreements with Cuba and said, "We have some hope there will be other similar kinds of small steps toward an increased ability to communicate and to discuss mutual concerns."

The President also responded to Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev's statement that the Soviet-U.S. arms limitation talks are not going well.

"The main thing that they have that concerns us is the increasing reliance on very large missiles with multiple warheads," Carter said. "The thing that we have that concerns them obviously is the capability to be able to deploy large numbers of cruise missiles at an early date."

He said U.S. negotiators will be "very persistent . . . without being in a hurry" about signing an agreement.

"I don't feel constrained every time we have a meeting with the Soviets to sign some kind of an agreement just to be signing something," he said.

Gov. Thompson's pet programs alive

GOP Gov. James R. Thompson has managed so far to keep most of his pet programs to reshape state government afloat but his tight-lipped budget bills could go overboard in the Democratic-controlled legislature. The freshman governor and former federal prosecutor has guided both law enforcement reorganization and the key part of his "get-tough-on-crime" package through stormy waters. But Thompson's austerity spending plans — his highest priority — are under steady attack, particularly from educators and state workers who aren't impressed when he says he would give them more if only the state had the money.

State employees, seeking wage hikes for 14 months, are growing testy. A group of rowdy union demonstrators gave Thompson's security force a scare when they crowded into his Capitol office and some members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees stayed off the job one day last week. AFSCME wants a 10 per cent salary boost this year and next but Thompson says the treasury can't handle any hike this year and just 5 per cent next year. Meanwhile, HB13 appropriating $47 million for a 5 per cent state workers' pay raise effective July 1 is at the passage stage in the House. The money is not in Thompson's budget.

The governor is faring no better on the education front. The Senate last week passed a bill earmarking state aid at the full funding level instead of the lower level proposed by Thompson. The governor insists he can only increase payments to grade schools and high schools by $75 million in fiscal 1978. Educators are pushing for well over $200 million more. Thompson did better with his higher education spending proposal, which would increase state support $50 million over last year compared to the roughly $100 million colleges and universities want. They were increased only slightly in the Senate.

Thompson can take comfort from the fate his government reorganization and anticrime measures have met so far. A House effort to reject his law enforcement executive order merging functions of the State Police and Illinois Bureau of Investigation failed last week.

Also still alive is Thompson's proposal to create a Class X felony for vicious crimes. Persons convicted would be sentenced to six years to life in prison without parole. The governor complained his crime bills were getting short shrift in the Senate but that idea, the key one in his package, went to the House last week when the Senate passed an omnibus crime bill.

Define death on case basis: AMA

Lawmakers should not try to formally define death because a strict definition could cause more problems than it would solve, according to a new professional standards book issued by the American Medical Association in Chicago. The book, titled "Opinions and Reports of the Judicial Council," is the first complete revision of the AMA's standards for doctors. A statutory definition of death, the book says, "is neither desirable or necessary for physicians or patients, as it may result in confusion instead of clarification as advances in scientific capabilities occur."

The report recommends instead that death be determined on a case-by-case basis based on "the clinical judgment of the physician using the necessary available and currently accepted criteria." The book also condemns mercy killing but says it is the decision of the patient and his family whether extraordinary means should be used to prolong life when death is imminent.

X-ray risk to unborn cited

Diagnostic X-Rays performed on pregnant women can cause genetic damage to their babies and increase the babies' risk of certain childhood diseases, including leukemia, two researchers reported in the current Journal of the American Medical Association. The pair noted that even low doses of radiation can cause genetic harm to the offspring. "There is clear prima facie evidence that exposure to the low levels of ionizing radiation can produce a drastically increased risk of leukemia and other diseases in children exposed to these levels," the researchers said.

Residents return home after smoke bomb attack

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

HENRICI SAID all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrabot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 8 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Henrici said fragments of the bomb are being analyzed at the state crime lab in Joliet in hopes of determining what type of gas it contained and who set off the device.

Elk Grove Village police would not comment on the incident.

SHATTERED WINDOWS in her second floor apartment serve as a reminder to Kim Chrabot of a smoke bomb that was detonated in the second floor hallway of 216 Washington Square late Sunday. The windows were broken by firefighters to disperse toxic fumes in the building.

VFW sees renewed patriotism

"I see a renewed fever in this nation turning toward patriotism," Raymond R. Soden, past commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Monday told parade observers.

And so it was as throngs lined the streets to pay homage to the war dead as they watched the annual Memorial Day parade sponsored by the Arlington Heights VFW Post 981.

They started gathering on the curbs at 8:30 a.m., strategically placing their blankets and lawn chairs to get the best view. Some even took to the trees and rooftops so as not to miss anything.

When the smiling marchers stepped off at 9:30 a.m. from Arlington Heights Road and Sigwalt Street to wind their way to Memorial Park they were cheered by onlookers who waved flags and clapped in appreciation.

LED BY GRAND Marshals Ernest Nimmern and Phil Engelking, two World War I veterans, 58 units representing scout troops, civic organizations and service organizations marched in the parade. High School bands from Arlington, Buffalo Grove, Elk Grove and John Hersey were parade favorites along with Ronald McDonald and Harvey, the Firedog.

"It's terrible they don't have convertibles anymore. It's hard to see who is in the cars," lamented one onlooker.

But State Representatives Eugenia Chapman and Virginia Macdonald had their own solution. They rode on the tailgate of a station wagon. As they waved to the crowd, one woman couldn't ignore her motherly instinct. "Hi, be careful," she shouted as they rode by.

One fellow from the 4-H Club went the distance of the parade route on a pogo stick, four other youths rode unicycles and Lyn Houdek, 8, proved that even a broken leg couldn't keep her out of the parade as she was pulled along side of her Brownie troop in a wagon.

Poppy Princess Chris Petry, 11, Elk Grove Village, liked the parade just fine except that every time the truck she was riding in stopped she went flying from her seat.

And then there was Cheek-O, a friendly horse who liked to mix with the crowd.

"HI, GUYS. This is Cheek-O. He just wanted to come over and say hi," said former Arlington Heights Trustee Dwight Walton atop of Cheek-O. On the other side of the road Village Pres. James Ryan decked out in a ten-gallon hat and cowboy garb rode another horse.

As the parade reached Memorial Park, the groups took their places to listen to Memorial Day ceremonies.

"Speaking for those we honor today, they do rest in peace because our nation is at peace," Soden said. "We pay tribute not only to their memory but to this nation and what it stands for. . . Let us pray we will continue to have peace and there will never be another Veteran of Foreign Wars."

Mrs. Chapman, who said it was the 24th year her family had participated in the observance of the Arlington Heights Memorial Day parade, presented Edward Doyle of Post 981 with the Illinois state flag.

Wreaths in honor of the war dead were placed on markers at Memorial Park by the VFW Auxiliary, Arlington Police Dept., Lions Club, Elk Grove VFW Post 9284, American Legion Merle Guild Post 208, Kiwanis Club, Elks Club, Rotary Club, Arlington Heights Chamber of Commerce and Jaycees. A 15-gun salute to the war dead followed by the VFW Post 981 firing squad.

Neighbors protest condo plans

comment about why they wanted to sell.

Another neighbor, Anne Lippke, has lived in her 121-year-old home at 412 W. Campbell St. for 34 years. She has vowed to fight Dick's proposal.

"I can assure you there will be organized opposition when the time comes and it goes to the plan commission," Mrs. Lippke said.

"WE ALL LIVE here by choice because it's a charming neighborhood," she said. "When I read about how close-knit Bridgeport (the late Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley's South Chicago neighborhoods) is I can understand because that's the way it is here. People grow up, raise their kids and die right on this block."

The residents fear the already heavily traveled Campbell Street will become more congested with the 120 parking spaces required for an 80-unit project.

Joan Herbst, whose home at 409 W. Campbell St. is three feet from the property line of the proposed condominium, worries about traffic from a driveway just outside her side door.

"My bedroom and bathroom windows face right onto where they want to put the front of the condominium," she said. "Would you like to see four stories of brick 20 feet from your window?"

"They say they will put a retaining wall between our house and the driveway but that would even make things worse," Mrs. Herbst said.

"MY HUSBAND grew up down the street and we moved here 12 years ago because we liked the neighborhood," she said. "But I'm afraid this building will do away with our privacy and lower our property values."

Mrs. Herbst's mother-in-law, Martha, has lived at 512 W. Campbell St. for 42 years and fears the already low water pressure in homes on the block will be worsened.

"I can't get water upstairs now without turning off the water downstairs," she said with a thick German accent. "What will happen if they put a condominium over there?"

"This is a nice neighborhood and I think it's a terrible idea," she said. "I'm against and I'd do anything not to have it."

Gifted student coordinator hired

Wheeling Township Dist. 21 has hired a coordinator for its gifted student program, restoring one of the positions eliminated in last year's budget reduction.

The board of education last week voted to hire Frances Voris as the gifted program coordinator beginning in September at a minimum annual salary of $17,500.

The board also approved an application for $14,700 in state money to fund the gifted student program for the coming school year.

THE GIFTED program in Dist. 21 trains teachers to identify and work with gifted children. Eighty teachers and 440 children are involved in the program this school year, said Marjorie Beu, assistant superintendent for instruction.

The job of gifted coordinator was cut last spring when the board trimmed an anticipated 41 million deficit in the 1976-77 budget. At that time the board cut $500,000 in teacher salaries, $350,000 in administration costs and $280,000 in supplies.

Although the gifted program continued this year, the job of coordinating training workshops was handled by Miss Beu. She also absorbed the job of music coordinator, one of the positions cut last year.

Supt. Kenneth Gill said the district decided to restore the gifted coordinator post when it learned a portion of state funds could be used to pay the coordinator's salary.

Previously the money was earmarked for supplies and wages for substitute teachers who filled in when teachers attended training sessions, he said.

NO SALARY was set for Ms. Voris. Miss Beu, said, however, the base for the post is $17,500 a year.

Ms. Voris, the language arts consultant for the Elmhurst public schools, was language arts coordinator in Dist. 21 until last June.

Miss Beu said although the district

Trial of Hanafi Muslims to begin

Hamas Abdul Khaalis and 11 of his Hanafi Muslim followers go on trial Tuesday on murder charges stemming from the March takeover of three Washington buildings. A reporter was killed and 149 persons were taken hostage in the three-day siege. Ironically, the trial will be held in a courtroom renovated to tighten security for the 1974 murder trial of five men accused of killing seven members of Khaalis' family. One of Khaalis' demands during the March 9-11 takeover was delivery to him from prison of the men convicted for those murders. Khaalis said he wanted to mete out his own punishment.

A 32-count indictment charges the 12 Hanafis with murder, armed kidnaping, assault with intent to kill, conspiracy and related offenses during their siege at the District of Columbia Building, the international headquarters of B'nai B'rith and the Islamic Center. They finally surrendered 39 hours after storming the buildings. At a pretrial hearing last week, spectators were searched with metal detectors when they entered the D.C. Superior Court building and again outside the courtroom. The court sought to have the trial moved to a larger federal courtroom but federal judges refused, saying better security could be provided at the Superior Court.

Ex-Episcopal priest due in court

A defrocked Episcopal priest goes on trial in Winchester, Tenn. Tuesday for allegedly showing young boys obscene films, giving them liquor to loosen them up and then taking pornographic pictures of them engaging in homosexual activities. The state has charged former priest Cladius "Bud" Vermilye, 47, with 16 counts of violating state laws relating to unnatural sex acts. Vermilye operated a rural home for wayward boys in this southeastern Tennessee community.

State District Attorney General Bill Pope said Monday it was too late for a delay in the case and he expects the trial to open as scheduled Tuesday. However, Joe Bean, defense attorney for Vermilye, said he would ask for a delay in the trial because of recent publicity. Bean said he would cite a recent CBS-TV documentary on nationwide child pornography which mentioned Vermilye's case.

Gas additive probe pondered

A government task force is considering a $15 million program which could be the biggest vehicle test ever to find out whether a new gasoline additive destroys the effectiveness of automobile catalytic converters or poses a health hazard, an environmental newsletter said Monday. The new additive, called "MMT," is being used to replace lead in gasoline as a way to boost octane and provide anti-knock properties. The Environmental Report said the Environmental Protection Agency has formed a special MMT working group and is considering the possibility of a 500-car, 50,000-mile testing program. It quoted one member of the MMT panel as saying the proposed tests would be "the biggest vehicle study ever done."

Fear India train crash kills 41

Part of an express train plunged into a flooded river Monday in the eastern state of Assam, killing at least 41 passengers, national news agency Samachar said in New Delhi. Quoting railway officials, the agency said a bridge over the river gave way as the 11-coach train was crossing it and the engine and two front coaches fell into the river and were completely submerged. It said on a first count, 41 persons were listed as dead and more than 100 others injured, several of them seriously. The accident occurred near Gauhati city, about 400 miles northeast of Calcutta.

Rhodesians destroy 2 black bases

Rhodesia said Monday its air-supported troops destroyed two more black nationalist guerrilla bases and killed eight more insurgents in continuing raids deep into southwestern Mozambique, bringing the death toll to at least 28. One of the bases was situated in the area of Mapai, about 50 miles inside Mozambique. The communique described it as the main supply center and guerrilla headquarters controlling all incursions into southeastern Rhodesia and said large quantities of weapons, ammunition, explosives and equipment were destroyed. On Sunday, military authorities said security forces with air support overran a camp about three miles inside Mozambique and killed at least 20 guerrillas. The camp hit Sunday was described as "a major terrorist administrative base" where "a large quantity of war material" was also destroyed.

Israeli power takeover by Begin starts

JERUSALEM (UPI) — The right-wing Likud bloc presented Menachem Begin to President Ephraim Katzir as a potential prime minister Monday, setting in motion the formalities for the takeover of power from the Labor party that has ruled Israel 29 years.

A seven-member Likud delegation said it discussed the shape of a Begin-led coalition government with Katzir during an hour-long meeting.

One member of the group, Ezer Weizman, expressed confidence Likud, the former opposition bloc, will be able to set up a coalition with a majority of at least 61 seats in the 120-member Knesset (parliament).

THE BIGGEST prospective partner, the Democratic Movement for Change, was scheduled to meet later to decide whether to continue coalition talks with the Likud.

The DMC broke off talks in protest against Begin's choice of Moshe Dayan as his foreign minister.

The session with Katzir is a necessary formality for all of the political parties that won seats in the Knesset in the May 17 election. He is expected to call on Begin to form the new government because the Likud won a plurality of 43 seats in the election. Labor won only 35 seats.

"We presented Mr. Begin as the potential prime minister and we discussed a few problems," said Weizman, 53, who will be named defense minister.

Begin, 63, was not present. He was released from the hospital Sunday following a six-day stay for treatment of a heart ailment and ordered by his doctors to rest until June 13.

Simha Eirlich, Likud's No. 2 leader, said the delegation "discussed coalition possibilities" with Katzir. "We would like to see as broad a coalition as possible," he said.

A GOVERNMENT that would include the more dovish DMC, headed by archeologist Yigael Yadin, would give the rightist Likud a broader base.

The DMC won 15 seats, grabbing most of them from disaffected voters of the Labor party that has ruled Israel since its birth in 1948.

Weizman said Likud's bare majority of 61 seats could be reached with a coalition of the National Religious party (12 seats), the Aguda religious party (four seats), and Shomzion (two seats).

A decision by the DMC to join the Begin coalition would give it 76 seats — more than enough for stability.

When Begin receives the mandate by Katzir to form a government, he has three days to decide whether to accept. If he accepts, he has 42 days in which to set up the coalition.

If he cannot form a government in that period, Katzir could turn to the runnerup in the election and give labor the mandate.

Old Cold War concepts slow detente: Soviets

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet Communist party Gen. Sec. Leonid I. Brezhnev accused Western leaders Monday of clinging to Cold War concepts that impede the progress of detente.

Speaking at a dinner in honor of visiting Bulgarian chief of state and party leader Todor Zhivkov, Brezhnev singled out for attack the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Council meeting, which President Carter attended after the London Economic Summit.

Brezhnev said the NATO Council meeting used "absolutely false estimates" of Soviet and Warsaw Treaty military policy to justify an increase in military appropriations.

The Soviet leader also criticized "certain forces" in West Germany who he said were trying to change the four-power agreement on West Berlin.

SOVIET PRESIDENT Nikolai V. Podgorny was absent without explanation from the dinner. He also was not among Zhivkov's airport welcoming committee headed by Brezhnev and was absent from Kremlin talks, reinforcing speculation that he soon will be removed formally from the presidency.

Podgorny has not been seen or his name mentioned in public in the week since his abrupt and unexpected removal from the all-powerful Communist party Politburo by the party Central Committee.

In contrast, Brezhnev appeared Sunday night on Soviet and French television in an address preparing for his visit to Paris in three weeks and Monday rode back from the airport to the Kremlin standing with Zhivkov through streets lined with flag-waving schoolchildren and workers.

It was unusual for Brezhnev to ride in an open car and for such ceremonial attention to be given to Zhivkov's arrival. The Bulgarian leader is the Soviets' closest Eastern bloc ally and frequently comes to Moscow.

The motorcade was shown live on national television.

BREZHNEV APPEARED to be going out of his way to display himself to the Soviet people and to underline the firmness of Soviet foreign policy to the West in an attempt to show that he is in firm command despite changes inside the Kremlin.

"Unwillingness to reckon with reality and frequently a return to notions inherited from the Cold War period, orientation to the arms race — all this is regrettably present in the policies of the Western powers," he declared in his dinner toast.

"This burden should have been discarded a long time ago. Then it would be that the progress of detente would go faster," he said.

bility for any bad effect. There is no liability on the pharmacist, nor any on the doctor provided, of course, they have not been negligent," he says.

IN ADDITION, generic substitution would be allowed only for an approved list of drugs. A panel of doctors, pharmacists and pharmacologists will draw up acceptable drug substitutes using "only the highest quality bio-equivalents," he says.

The Food and Drug Administration also disagrees with contentions that brand-name and generic drugs differ in quality.

"On the basis of the data we have accrued to date, we cannot conclude there is a significant difference in quality between the generic and brand-name product tested," said Dr. Henry E. Simmons, director of FDA's bureau of drugs, in a recent FDA article entitled, "Brand vs. Generic Drugs: It's only a Matter of Name."

However, in the case of at least one drug, digoxin, a widely used heart drug, substantial variations between brand-name and generic compounds have been found.

"THE DIFFERING reactions to digoxin was terrifying to us all," Wilkins says. "As physicians, we will accept our responsibilities. We'll take our lumps for our mistakes. But when the doctor doesn't have control, when his patient is taken out of his hands, that's something else again."

Brand-name drugs cost three, four and five times more than generic equivalents, Marovitz says, and an average price difference of 93 percent has been shown.

But Wilkins disputes the cost savings from generic drugs, and Clementi says, "It is important that whatever savings there might be really get passed on to the patient, and are not just picked up by the pharmacy."

Twenty-six other states already have a generic drug substitution bill, Marovitz says, and the only ones in which a substantial reduction in drug costs has not been shown are states in which the patient must ask for a generic substitution.

Illinois doctors do not need a new law to prescribe generic drugs if that is what they want to give their patients.

"When there is an opportunity to pass on a savings to a patient who is going to be taking a drug over a long period of time, I think most doctors will consider whether a generic can be used," Clementi says.

BUT MAROVITZ says there are forces at work that prevent doctors from prescribing generic drugs.

"First, people don't ask for generic drugs."

"Second, the large drug companies send out detail men to persuade doc-

good drugs and then it's copied."

"Lilly and Faisler make penicillin. They are two good companies. They put a lot of money into research and development," said Jeff Imig, pharmacist at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove, and Guardian Pharmacy Northwest, 1100 Central Rd., Arlington Heights.

"THEN YOU HAVE some schlock company that tries to copy it without the research," he said.

Tests have been run comparing some of the brand-name drugs to generics, Imig said.

"They have done a lot of tests on digoxin, a heart pill. They discovered that with generics, the absorption and dissolution of this drug in the body is way off," he said.

If the pill does not dissolve properly, ly, the patient does not receive enough medication. It could mean death, he said.

Pharmacists measure the quality of a drug by how well it dissolves in the body.

"It's like aspirin," said Dick Doretti, pharmacist at Doretti Pharmacy, 2 N. Main St., Mount Prospect. Doretti favors generic substitution, as long as drugs of proven quality are used. "We have Bayer aspirin, we have Squibb aspirin and we have Joe Schmo's aspirin for 29 cents."

"JOE SCHMO'S won't dissolve as well. It's the same situation with generic drugs. You are not so sure it is going to dissolve as well."

"Dissolution is an intangible," said Larry Wysocki, pharmacist at Medicare Pharmacy, 629 W. Golf. Medicare pharmacies specialize in dispensing generic drugs.

"It's fine to talk about something the public can't see," he said, explaining the dissolution rate too often is employed as an empty excuse for discouraging generic drug use.

"Where did the assumption come that all brand-name manufacturers are good and all generic are bad. I've opened both bottles of brand-name and generic where the medication was improperly compounded," he said.

Wysocki favors the Illinois bill. "I think the public will save money on it — generics cost an average of 60 percent of the brand-name drugs," he said.

HOWEVER, GENERIC drugs may not save the consumer as much money as he thinks. Generic drugs generally are cheaper than the brand-name variety, but the cost of ingredients is only one factor.

The cost of preparing the prescription and the pharmacist's services remain the same, whether the drug dispensed is cheap or expensive.

"We'll have to wait until the bill gets through the legislature to work out our pricing strategy," said Tom McGovern, pharmacy marketing manager for Osco. "We would make a lot less money on generics. But the cost of running a pharmacy remains the same."

Osco and Walgreen charge a percentage of the cost of medication for service. That percentage may have to increase to cover the service costs if generic drug use becomes widespread.

The smaller, privately owned pharmacies tend to charge flat fees.

An outrage in rape case

Rape is a vicious, violent crime. Many psychologists and criminologists don't believe that it has anything to do with sex. Instead, they say, it is the way some people act out their hostility toward the world in general and their victims in particular. Despite efforts to make the public understand that, for years rape victims have been doubly victimized by a society — by the police, courts and neighbors — which believes that any woman who is raped somehow was "asking for it."

Just when it seemed such prejudice was finally giving way to reason and compassion, the news comes from Madison, Wis., that a judge there has declared rape a "normal" reaction to today's sexually permissive society.

Judge Archie Simonson now says he did not mean to imply that the 15-year-old boy convicted of raping a girl in a high school stairwell ought to escape punishment. However, his remarks came as he was justifying his order that the youth be put under court supervision at home rather than in an institution.

In addition, Simonson has since reiterated his position that the incidence of rape would be reduced if women would stop wearing revealing clothing.

A group of women picketed the courthouse in Madison last week demanding Simonson's resignation.

The protests are certainly justified. And, while Simonson's future on the bench will have to be determined through whatever process Wisconsin has in such cases, we can hope the protest will make everyone see the absurdity of his position.

Simonson has cited newspaper advertisements, prostitution, bars with nude dancing and women who wear revealing clothing as examples of permissiveness that encourages rape.

By making such statements, the judge not only ignored the violence of the crime of rape but suggested that individuals should not be held responsible for crimes when society might "tempt" them.

Does Simonson seriously believe that a man is any more justified in raping a woman because of revealing fashions than he would be if he stole some expensive jewelry because he happened to see someone wearing it on the street?

Wheeling Village Pres. William Hein were deleted from the normally thorough minutes because, according to the village clerk, they were "political."

Apparently Village Clerk Alberta Klocke and secretary Lorraine Lark, who did the actual editing, don't consider the deletion "political."

The remarks removed from the minutes were an exchange between Trustee John Cole and Hein in which Cole charged Hein with meeting with James Stavros, the former Wheeling political boss who pleaded guilty in 1974 in a zoning shakedown scandal.

Cole raised the issue because of an effort by Hein's slate on the village board to replace the attorney who is representing the village in a lawsuit against Stavros.

Cole's charges are serious. Hein denied them and the whole matter probably would have joined the long list of controversies between Hein and some members of the village board if it weren't for the flap over the minutes.

Mrs. Klocke says the exchange can go back into the minutes "if anyone wants it."

The village board should "want it." Since Wheeling village board minutes generally reflect discussion in some detail, those for May 16 should reflect what happened and not a laundered version of events.

Civil rights experiences narrowed Young's views

Mayor Richard D. Hatcher of Gary, Indiana, complained the other day that the press had "converted" UN Ambassador Andrew Young into a comic character." Which is a little like charging the critics with finding Neil Simon's plays funny. It's the material that provides the laughter; let's not give those in the audience all the credit.

The latest insight from (Amos 'n') Andy Young is that South Africa will be the first black nation on the continent to be a nuclear power. A fellow who can come up with a punch line like that deserves credit for imagination, not to say provocation. At this point, Young is about as great a force for racial amity as George Wallace.

Ambassador Young might have avoided the louder guffaws by first running some of his impulses and Bright Ideas through the experts. The ambassador has said that experts ought not to be making the decisions in a democracy. Amen. But he wouldn't have been advocating in favor of experts just by using their expertise on occasion.

THE PHYSICIST Werner Heisenberg once described an expert only as "someone who knows some of the worst mistakes that can be made in his subject, and how to avoid them." Ambassador Young could have profited by a little consultation. Instead, he has made the correction, amplification and explanation of his comments one of the great growth industries in American journalism.

The only serious danger in Andy Young's performance may be that he makes the experts look too good. American diplomacy could stand some relief from expertism after Henry Kissinger. But, within weeks of taking office, Andy Young has given fresh new insights into foreign policy the character of punch lines. Americans may now shy away from expressing new ideas lest they come out like Andy Young's.

Precisely in those areas where the experts would most seem to need debunking, Ambassador Young seems to go on with their mistakes. In southern Africa, for example, American diplomats took up the shibboleth of Majority Rule when Henry Kissinger gave the signal and have been repeating it mindlessly ever since. Minority rights go unmentioned.

ONE WOULD think that an American black who had come up through the civil rights movement would be just the leader to spot the danger — and injustice — of severing majority rule from minority rights. Unalloyed majority rule was the doctrine that allowed racism to dominate so much of American life for so long.

Yet here is Andy Young, alumnus in good standing of The Movement, applying the same deadening doctrine to the whites of southern Africa: Majority rule without any mention of minority rights. Dawgone if Andy Young doesn't seem to wear racial blinders, too. That they are the reverse of those worn by conventional segs doesn't make them any less constricting.

Another example: In the course of re-explaining that he now considers the government of South Africa legitimate, Ambassador Young nevertheless said he hated everything connected with that government. That's understandable. It is not the sort of government that inspires love, especially the brotherly kind.

YET ONE can't imagine Andy Young making a similar remark about governments that oppress their people regardless of race, creed, color or national origin. Like the governments — alas, legitimate — of the Soviet Union, Communist China, North Vietnam and Cuba. On the contrary, Young seems to be in the forefront whenever it comes to extending a friendly hand to Vietnam's recently expanded tyranny. Or putting in a good word for Fidel Castro's slave plantation and mercenary manufactory.

Apparently it's only one kind of oppression that Young hates. The racial kind, and perhaps not even it when the colors are reversed. Unfortunately, fighting discrimination need not be a broadening experience; it can also be narrowing. Jimmy Carter now hails his ambassador to the United Nations not for his African policy (that area seems to have been handed over to Walter Mondale) but as a symbol of those who have struggled for the freedom of minorities in the world. As Andrew Young did.

But surely there are others who waged that same struggle, and who were not narrowed by the experience but broadened. Surely there were many who overcame not only discrimination but the bitterness it breeds, and who now can recognize injustice in a context other than race. Once again, one misses the presence of Barbara Jordan in the Carter Administration.

ANDREW YOUNG

Who can sentimentalize the 1960's?

BY MELVIN MADDOCKS

To some of us the '60s are "only yesterday" — the still-fresh decade in a memory bank that doesn't even program nostalgia until it gets back to the '50s. Make that the '40s. On the other hand, to those who were in their student days then and are now in their 30s the '60s stand nearly half a lifetime away.

And so a sort of "When-you-and-I-were-young-in-the-'60s" school of memoir-writing has sprung up. Everything else is done prematurely these days. Why not autobiography? — especially when it promises to turn its misty-eyed authors into millionaires in blue jeans. For example, Sara Davidson's "Loose Change: Three Women of the Sixties." This Berkley - and - after version of "The Group" worked its way up to the golden neighborhood of half a million dollars in paperback and film rights, even before publication.

Loose change indeed!

ALAS, IN THESE retrospectives of the '60s certain strange alchemistries occur. We have, in the first place, fairly formidable young people as they were for better and for worse in history: marching at Selma — and experimenting with every drug that flew; protesting against napalm — and setting back education 10 years by their demands for "relevance." It is a record that deserves sorting out.

But complexity is not what these precocious autobiographers appear interested in. Ten years later, as children of affluence now come to their own affluence, the '60s chroniclers are as beguiled by their younger selves as the fondest parents leafing through an old family album. When they get down to putting the whole business on paper, they recall their first joint as sentimentally as Proust recalled his madeleine and lime tea — indiscriminately seeing it all as Lost Innocence. Stylistically the results can read like a bizarre mixture of "confessional" journalism and the adventures of Nancy Drew that goes something like this:

"1964. The times they were a-changin', as Bob Dylan was about to say. 'Up against the wall, everybody! — that was the mood. What yummy excitement as you tossed your brick through the nearest Bank of America window. When I think of the '60s, I think of Beatles songs everywhere — happy songs that made you skip and whistle through the old wrecked quad-drangle at 3 o'clock in the morning, like 'I Want to Hold Your Hand.'"

"It was wonderful to be young, and there was Jeremiah. When he was being serious, Jeremiah had a way of crossing his eyes that really turned me on. Jeremiah was serious all the time. He carried a legal pad with him on which he was working out a plot to assassinate both his senators. Stimulaneously, Jeremiah taught me about commitment. The word came out like a diamond on black velvet when he pronounced it.

"JEREMIAH TOOK ME to my first demonstration. Somebody stuck a sign in my hands, and we all marched. I think my sign read: 'Lyndon Johnson murders children.' But it didn't matter. It was all about freedom, that was the thing, and my roommates, Felicia and Deirdre, understood this too.

"But Deirdre less than Felicia, because Jeremiah had been Deirdre's friend before he became mine. Why is it some people can talk about freedom but not live it?"

"In the long spring afternoons near the end of term we'd sit around a cafe called the Sad Ballad and talk about going to India or Marrakesh or maybe Turkey, and I used to write really terrific Haikus on paper napkins. I wish I'd saved them. They were purple.

"Weren't we all so innocent in those days? My old roommate Deirdre still won't speak to me. But Felicia is on her third marriage, to a really promising stockbroker who made $60,000 even in the bad year of 1975, and we try to keep up. We were saying just the other day that if we ever had children — big if! — we want them to be just the way we were."

She asks support for depot restoration

The "Committee to Save the North Western Depot" circa 1894, presented petitions and testimony to the Arlington Heights Board of Trustees May 16. The bids on the new station were let without talking to the Model Railroad Club, Questors, members at large of the historical society and persons interested in historical preservation.

Ideally if Arlington Heights must have a new station, (of colonial architecture) it should be built west of Vail Avenue. There is a good piece of land there to enable commuters to meet the trains, and Arlington Heights Road, Evergreen, Dunton, and Vail would no longer be blocked, and we could shop in our beleaguered downtown without a 45 minute street blockage. Then the old station could be restored in the middle of the beautiful Arlington Beautification Committee plantings as a transportation museum and educational facility and community meeting room.

It is only one of two old North Western depots remaining, and would record the growth of Arlington Heights and the Northwest suburbs along the North Western right-of-way. Stations have been restored in Elmhurst, Itasca, Wilmette, Evanston and Indianapolis. There is a national preservation society dealing only with restoring and recycling stations.

The next preferred location for the old station would be on the recently leveled lot at Vail and Fremont, across the street from the historical society complex. After all, this parcel of land was purchased by the village manager from funds donated (extracted) from new developments in the downtown area, for open land, and certainly not for a commuter parking lot.

Part of the cost of removing the old station, about $6,000 in the bid, could very easily be transferred to the cost of moving the station to an acceptable new location. The Arlington Heights Park Board has looked at the project of a restored train depot favorably, and have thought that it could be situated adjacent to Prairie Farm.

We do, however, need money, and time and cooperation between the village and persons interested in restoration of the depot. Perhaps the Bicentennial and festival committees would loan us their funds as a revolving fund for preservation. Meanwhile, Questors, railroaders, school children, local business people and banks could begin to contribute funds. Perhaps even the North Western would help with the restoration fund.

On test fanfare

I look upon the furor Elk Grove Twp. Dist. 59's parents are causing with amusement.

Berkley School (Arlington Heights Dist. 25) released tests scores to third and fourth grade parents on May 16 with no fanfare or hoopla. As parents we should be interested in our own child's score, not his peers'.

If a child receives a low reading score, I don't believe it reflects on his teacher but rather on his parents. Children learn by example. How many of these parents prefer to watch TV rather than read a book, magazine or newspaper? And when is the last time they took their children to the library? When their children learn reading is worthwhile, then parents can first expect high test scores and scream when they don't get them.

Carter's energy program means stretching RV mpg

by EDWARD S. LECHTIZIN

DETROIT (UPI) — Interstate 75, stretching 1,300 miles from the upper Midwest to the heart of Florida, is like a lifeline to a major U.S. industry waiting for reaction to President Carter's energy message to set in.

Thousands of vacation-bound motorists pulling trailers or driving motor homes travel I-75 each day. How far they will travel in the future depends on what the President does to their cars, motor homes and gasoline.

"In general, the recreation vehicle business is growing so fast that the energy programs could slow it but certainly would not stop it," says James O. Capolongo, vice president and general manager of the Truck and Recreation Products Operation for the Ford Motor Co.

"IT COULD BE knocked down a notch, but I hope the final law the government is working on won't discriminate against RVs."

Motor homes are conspicuous consumers of gasoline, mainly because it's hard not to see one, especially if you and your family are squeezed into a small car on the way to a vacation.

A typical mini-motor home on a cut-away van chassis might average 8 or 9 miles per gallon. Most won't be affected immediately by Carter's plans to tax "large gas-guzzling" cars, though fuel economy standards down the road are sure to lean on them.

Their numbers are small in relation to more than 107 million cars now on the road, auto and recreation vehicle executives say. A vacation in an RV actually may be less energy-consuming than a fly-and-drive trip or even a vacation by car.

According to one energy use comparison, a family of four traveling in a mini-motor home will use the equivalent of 260 gallons of gasoline on a 2,600 mile trip to Disneyworld while the same family flying down and then renting a car would use 610 gallons.

"IF GASOLINE goes up a dime a gallon, it would only cost me about $60 a year since I drive about 6,000 miles a year. And that's more than some of the people I know who own motorhomes," Jim Phillips of Lapeer, Mich., says.

In February and March, Phillips, his wife and two children spent time on the road traveling to Disneyworld in Florida and then to New Orleans before returning to their home in frigid Michigan.

"If gasoline does go up, maybe I'll take shorter trips," he says. "The prospect of even $50 or $60 more for a vacation won't stop me from going out West if I want to. But it might make me look at a more thrifty unit when it comes time to trade in a couple of years."

The auto companies who put together the basic power for motor homes and provide the cars to haul trailers are looking at a number of energy-saving devices.

"At 60 cents a gallon, fuel economy is a big factor in operating a motor home," Capolongo says. "But you can't turn a big truck into a Pinto. There are some things you can't cut out, like large tires and heavy-duty brakes."

"Downsizing a truck is a lot different than cutting out weight on a car."

CAPOLONGO SAYS there are many developments that will provide greater fuel economy for RVs.

These include Ford's dual displacement engine that can operate on only three of its six cylinders, diesel engines and stratified charge powerplants. Also in the works are lighter-weight motor home units, using aluminum, plastic and greater aerodynamic styling to improve fuel economy.

Doug Toms, president of the Recreation Vehicle Industry Assn., says there already are prototypes of new mini-motor homes capable of 18 to 20 miles per gallon. He feels this as a general rule in the smaller motor homes.

"They won't be as easy to drive since they will have smaller engines and manual transmissions," Toms says. "The bottom line is that when Carter says we have to conserve, we'll do our best. But people don't want to give up the quality of their life."

"My basic reaction is that when I take an RV, while I'm on vacation my home is smaller than your house and it uses less energy than your house. Motor homes use less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the gasoline consumed each day in this country."

"IF YOU WERE to wipe them out, you wouldn't even notice the difference as far as energy consumption is concerned," despite Carter's energy plans, the RVIA still expects sales of all types of RVs to exceed 633,000 in 1977, topping the old record of 582,000 units in 1972.

While outwardly confident that Carter's energy message will have little effect on the recreational vehicle industry that is making a strong comeback after a two-year Arab oil embargo-induced recession, there are some who are worried.

"It scares us. If his plans go through, it may mean a lot of people from the North who stop here won't even come this far," says Mrs. Merlene Meyer who, with her husband, operates the Mountain Shadows KOA Kampground at the foot of Lookout Mountain near Chattanooga, Tenn.

"A lot of people who went into RVs because of economical reasons may be forced out if gasoline gets too expensive or the tax on the larger cars they need to pull trailers is too high," she says. "What we're trying to do is encourage people who live within 150 miles of us to think of staying closer to home."

Toms sees an ever-increasing number of Americans switching to one of the hottest segments of the RV market — the van conversions — while Capolongo is concerned that fuel economy regulations might hurt the sale of 4-by-4s, four-wheel drive vehicles capable of going nearly anywhere.

RVIA ESTIMATES for 1977 include the sale of more than 190,000 travel trailers and another 22,000 fifth wheel trailer, which are longer than the normal trailer and are pulled by light pickup trucks.

While dealers hope to sell about 46,000 "Class A" motor homes, 20 to 35-foot fully integrated units built on truck chassis, and more than 85,000 of the "Class C" mini-motor homes, 15- to 25-foot units built on a cut-away van chassis, the "Class B" van conversions should account for more than 145,000 sales.

The "Class B" units range from the very basic "surfer van" with little more than sitting and sleeping facilities to "mod" units with nearly all the comforts of home but in a smaller package.

The 4-by-4s aren't even included in the RVIA estimates, but they've climbed from 200,000 units five years ago to better than 600,000 this year.

"But the fuel economy of those vehicles is a lot less than for other cars and trucks," Capolongo says. "There's a big concern over what the government might do on the final fuel economy standards and like motor homes, travel trailers and vans, the 4-by-4s could be hit hard by standards yet to arrive."

Job expectations may be reworked

NEW YORK — Two centuries ago this country was founded on the revolutionary idea that its citizens had the right to pursue happiness. Nowadays we have improved on Jefferson: we consider that we have the right not just to chase happiness, but to catch it and enjoy it, and a large share of our present dissatisfaction consists of our being denied what we have come to think of as our natural right.

Happiness on the job seems particularly illusive. Distaste for traditional work at home has been part of the impetus behind the movement to "liberate" women. Yet women, like men, increasingly find that a daily exodus to a factory floor or an office cubicle is not necessarily the root to instant Nirvana, either.

Frustration with one's work, and impatience with that frustration, are central facts of our times. They showed up dramatically at the convention of one of the nation's major industrial unions, The United Auto Workers, in Los Angeles. While public attention centered on the overwhelming election of Douglas Fraser to succeed the retiring Leonard Woodcock as president, the convention disclosed a union that, like much of our society, really doesn't know where it's going.

CRUELLY DIVISIVE internal questions typified the confusion and anger of modern man's relationship with his work. And above all others, was the clash between the older generation which takes credit for the union's current strength and the younger generation which sees neither company bosses nor union bosses as its allies.

The new generation is a product of the 1960s, with its promise of immediate "solutions" and unending "rights." "You shouldn't have to come into the plant and be harassed," says one irate 25-year-old quoted in Business Week.

He and his fellows are slow to rally behind traditional wage and job-secuity issues. They are more concerned with the "quality" of their life on the job, and when they don't like what they get they frequently stay away or engage in wildcat strikes.

The relative discipline of unions such as the UAW — whatever their failings elsewhere — has been a significant U.S. economic asset. I once suggested to Leonard Woodcock that he would be a management hero in Britain, where the auto companies have to deal with 30 different unions, none of which can provide assurances contract agreements will be honored by their members. Woodcock smiled and acknowledged he was treated rather well when he visited there, but found that he soon became the same old villain, in management's eyes, when he returned to Detroit.

The discontent of American workers, symbolized by the UAW's fissures, is not unique. Atlas World Press Review, in its June issue, carries reports from a number of countries on growing demands for what it calls "humanizing work."

A GROUP OF social scientists in Brussels notes "a shift of emphasis away from material needs and anxieties and toward demands for a better quality of life, both at work and in leisure."

A French magazine reports on the European trend toward "worker participation" in management decisions. A German weekly talks of "flexible working hours," and an Australian speaks glowingly of "sabbaticals for all."

Louis Rukeyser

Yet happiness, as always, may not be mechanically attainable. Would workers who howl now about "unresponsive union bureaucrats" be mollified if one of those bureaucrats happened to sit on the company board of directors? Nor have we lost our ambivalence toward work itself: the individual worker may seek more leisure for himself, but he likes to hear his political leaders are laboring for unpaid overtime.

In the end it may be necessary, along with upgrading working conditions, to downgrade unrealistic expectations about work satisfactions. Just as not every marriage can be a continuous erotic and emotional wonderland, so not every job can be a nonstop delight to the soul.

While studying ways to avoid degradation and eliminate tedium, we also need to study the human heart: the right to pursue happiness may be the most we can expect, after all.

Abel steps aside, leaves union legacy

I.W. Abel, who joined the labor movement at 22 after losing his factory job during the Great Depression, retires Wednesday after 12 years as president of the 1.4 million-member United Steelworkers Union. Abel, 68, who descended from Welsh coal miners and was the son of a blacksmith, worked side-by-side with Mexican, Italian and Slavic immigrants in the Canton, Ohio, steel mills in the 1930s. But as a member of the union's top hierarchy for a quarter-century, he saw the USW's ranks eventually swell to include women and even college graduates.

"I'm going to lead the good life now," he joked after the union's presidential election in February, when Abel-supported Lloyd McBride defeated insurgent Edward Sadlowski in an affirmation of the Abel philosophy. After McBride is sworn in Wednesday, Abel will reside in Sun City, Ariz., away from the noisy, dirty life of steel mills, in a quieter world of fishing and gardening. For steelworkers, Abel gained what the White House has described as the highest wages paid to industrial workers in the United States.

His legacy is one of forging a modern age of labor-management relations, capped by the cooperative "no strike" agreement signed in 1973 and renewed this year. It bars a national walkout, and with the mills producing steel round-the-clock during the year, profits, and thus workers' wages, are maximized.

Chamber sets energy program

The Illinois State Chamber of Commerce today will announce a proposed energy program for the state. Among goals are modification of air pollution control regulations to increase the use of Illinois coal and high sulfur oils and increased bonding authority to provide funding for pollution control devices aimed at expanded use of Illinois coal.

Implementation of state and federal energy policies, a balance between environmental and economic goals and preservation of traditional gas and electric service rate structures are included in the program.

ELLIOT SILBER OF NORTHBROOK

brightest daytime stars.

More than 31 million people, ages 18 to 80, of both sexes, watch soap operas every week and that's not counting those who get hooked on daytime drama temporarily while they are home sick or on vacation.

For those who never thought they would be dragged into the stream of such melodrama, the networks had adapted serialization in prime time with successes such as "Rich Man, Poor Man," "Family," and "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman." There will be more like them this fall.

THE SOAP OPERA formula of suffering, sex and love in the afternoon ultimately may do for prime time what it has done for daytime television. The networks make most of their profits from lucrative daytime television where the production of soap operas, game shows and children shows are relatively low and the commercial air time purchased by advertisers is high.

Soap operas are the network's calling cards in the daytime and there are more of them being created all the time. Because the fans are continually pleading for more, the networks have taken steps to lengthen many of their most popular soaps from half hour to full-hour segments every day.

"Days of Our Lives," "Another World," "As the World Turns" and "All My Children" have successfully gone to an hour-long format with many other soaps expected to follow.

But, however beneficial to the networks, actors and producers have mixed feelings about the trend to one-hour segments.

"I think the quality sometimes suffers when the length is expanded to one hour. You are forced to work more hours and put out more for each day's episode. I really don't know how much patience daytime audiences have to sit through one hour-long soap after another," said Jean Arley, producer of "Love of Life."

BUD KLOSS, producer of "All My Children," said he required a larger studio and staff when the soap opera last month was expanded to an hour.

"You can tell more of a story and develop your character relationships better in an hour than you can in a half hour. Thirty minutes just gave us enough time to recap what we had to and to introduce new story developments. I don't know how long we'll be able to work under this kind of strain," he said.

"I've been in this business long enough to know the 15 minute, the half hour and now the hour formats. The public is ready for it, but I don't know if we are."

Some actors such as Michael Storm, who plays Dr. Larry Wolek on "One Life to Live," may be forced to forego their soap opera careers because they do not agree with the one-hour soap concept.

"Many actors like myself enjoy doing live theater productions for a change of pace. It's a fundamental necessity to many of us. If we expand to an hour each day, we won't have time for any outside activities or as much time to be with our families, and it will affect whether or not I decide to continue my role in the show," he said.

HOWEVER, MOST actors seem willing to sacrifice the time spent on the show in return to the opportunities that are exclusive to daytime drama. The scripts are better, they say, and the characterization is better. There is more steady work and fame than is found with night-time television, they say.

Soaps are better than they used to be.

They deal with timely issues and social problems including rape, abortion, drug addiction, child abuse, handicaps, war, divorce, mastectomy and single parenthood.

Men are no longer confined to the professions of doctors and lawyers and are no longer required to play the part of the smart and strong. Female characters on soaps have been liberated from the home and are in the working world, fending for themselves. They are no longer portrayed as the helpless and weak.

At the core of every good soap opera is the one necessary element, "family."

"People feel that they are a part of the family they see on television," said Kathryn Hays who plays the part of Kim Dixon on "As the World Turns."

"Perhaps people are grasping for something that they don't have in their own lives. Soap opera is the only constant for many of them. They know they can tune in every day at the same time and find themselves in a little fictitious town, with a family they have known for years."

Religion, work, crime, marriage, birth and death are essential elements of soap operas which attempt to recreate real life. Soap operas do such a good job that viewers often are confused between the fiction on television and the drama in their own world, she said.

So, actresses such as Ms. Hays are beginning to do concert tours during their free time, to give the public a look at who they really are.

MS. HAYS AND Don Hastings, who portrays Dr. Bob Hughes on "As the World Turns," have teamed up in a singing and dancing show they are taking on tour this summer and which they recently premiered in their hometown of Princeton, Ill.

Ruth Warrick, who portrays Phoebe Tyler on "All My Children" has initiated "Soap Opera Festivals," one of which will be held June 26 at the Mill Run Theatre in Niles, where a troupe of soap opera stars will mingle with fans and answer questions.

Just this past week, Ms. Hays and several other daytime stars demonstrated their singing and dancing talents during a special entitled "After Hours," and more daytime actors and actresses are being seen in episodes of regular night-time series.

John Gabriel, who portrays Dr. Seneca Beaulac on "Ryan's Hope," probably was the most visible in his role as Mary Richards' boyfriend on the "Mary Tyler Moore" show this past season.

Even the soaps themselves will be showing up in prime time during the new fall season. Agnes Nixon, creator of "All My Children" and "One Life to Live," is developing a soap opera designed for the night-time that will debut on ABC later this year. ABC also is premiering a parody of soaps called, appropriately enough, "Soap."

IT HAS BEEN 25 years since soap operas such as "The Guiding Light" and "Search for Tomorrow" made their television premieres and audiences have remained loyal to them and other daytime dramas.

A few of the soap operas ("General Hospital," "Days of Our Lives" and "The Young and the Restless") have moved their productions to the West Coast, but most of the soaps are cranked out day after day in New York studios just as they were years ago.

Although the art of soap opera has come a long way in the last quarter century, a few of the fundamentals still are the same. Viewers have not changed. They still want reassurances that the American family is intact and that someone has worse problems than they do.

Wildlife Safari on the Mall

The Great Lakes Chapter of the East African Wildlife Society will sponsor an information and educational exhibit on the mall Saturday and Sunday, June 4-5.

Featuring the preservation of animals native to East Africa, the exhibits will be set up by local zoo and nature clubs, and will include a movie presentation continuously on the mall.

America's national bird, the Bald Eagle will be emphasized in the exhibit to be sponsored by the Science Club of Forest View High School. An electronic question and answer booth will provide information about the Bald Eagle, how it survives today and how the future may effect this great bird.

Dusty Hudson and the Maxwell Brothers, Backfire & Rattletrap, those three lovable characters from Six Flags Over Mid-America, will be visiting RANDHURST Sunday, June 5. Dusty & The Maxwell Brothers will be up to their old slapstick antics while meeting all their friends, both young and "young at heart." Dusty Hudson & The Maxwell Brothers are seen daily at Six Flags, a 200-acre family amusement center just west of St. Louis.

Grand prize of a trip to Six Flags Over Mid-America will be awarded via coupon drawing, also additional prizes of 25 pairs of tickets will be awarded. Come in Thursday through Sunday, June 2-5 and fill out coupons at Six Flags booth for a chance to win. Winners will be notified.

Attention Pipe Smokers: You'll want to enter Briar Squire's annual pipe smoking contest to be held on June 11th. Register now at Briar Squire, $1 fee.

Later in the month you'll want to join the New Generation action when Chrysler Motors Corp. brings its "macho" exhibit of trucks, cars and vans to enliven the mall, June 23-26.

Naughty nighties for bedroom eyes

by MARIANNE SCOTT

When it comes to sleepwear, some gowns are styled for women of the night, others are styled for women who want to sleep. And the difference is apparent to most any pair of bedroom eyes — even with the lights out.

Like sleeping in the buff, less is often more when it comes to sexiness in the boudoir, but whether she opts for stripped down chic or lace-lavished, wispy romanticism, any woman can become a shady lady by moonlight.

Since sexiness never seems to go out of style, stores and shops are always well supplied with bedtime turn-outs.

NOT FOR THE shy or timid are the vampish necklines and devilish hemlines — both slit to the navel — super sensuous sexwear with cut out "construction" or deceitful darts that make even the less endowed look seductively bosomy.

For the more conservative — or those who sleep alone — there are the sugar and spice and everything nice gowns. Diaphanous, cloud-like chiffons or little frilly cottons with smocking, ribbons, ruffles, marabou and other beguiling passementerie may be a gal's choice for the private side of her life.

Naughty but nice is the sleepwear fashioned from Crepeset, a fabric that fits closely without cling. Kayser's "Alice Blue" strapless, cling-free gown seems sweetly innocent but is said to pack a wicked wallop.

Vassarette's baby doll and bikini pants are not exactly demure, and Val Mode's eyelid camisole and tap pants are described as outrageously sexy, but not shocking, thanks to non-cling fabrics.

SHADES OF THE Gay '90s are the saucy corselet gowns by Gossard; fragile yet flirty the dazzling white on white stripe by Miss Elaine.

As for colors and fabrics, dangerously alluring are the silky tricot and satins in flirtatious black, vicious pink or pristine white.

Although prints aren't needed as a source of conversation in the bedroom, you can play the field when it comes to flowered slumberwear this summer. Garden crops range from bashful daisies and sentimental roses to bold jungle orchids and sunflowers.

But if harvesting perennials isn't your basket, try a little fantasizing. Be an exciting harem girl, a purring jungle beastie or a quaint peasant in a palace. Travel to the exotic Casbah, the mysterious Far East or even The Great Wall of China.

Styles and prints can match just about any conscious or subconscious dream, and many of these fashion vagaries are suitable for at home entertaining — in other than the bedroom — or even for a night out on the town.

AND FOR THOSE who couldn't care less about between-the-sheets coordination or how drab or bizarre the mirror reflection in the morning, there are T-shirts, long underwear, flannel sleep coats and of course bunny and clown suits (pajamas).

There may be some validity in the pithy sophism about women who play the pajama game being sexually repressed. But there are those who will tell you that pajamas sure beat those seductive, lacy numbers when greeting a jumping dog in the morning or a bunch of kids waiting for someone to cook breakfast.

Besides, sexy, décollete gowns aren't noted for their warmth and, in their own way, pajamas do help battle the energy crisis.

Flash Gordon fantasies inspire lingerie line

by ELLIE GROSSMAN

That kind of detail is quite beyond him, really. Fernando Sanchez has no idea what his lingerie line retails for.

Eh bien, how can he be expected to know when his head is jammed with fantasies and images? For example:

Moroccan plazas at noon where, in the blazing sun, he says, "You will find 3,000 people all dressed in blue."

Coca Cola ads from his childhood in France, the ones where young women wore dresses with distinctive ribbon embellishment;

Flash Gordon comic strips with the villainess running around in slinky dresses slit up the sides; and A Thousand And One Nights with all its goings-on.

MIND YOU, there's a purpose to all this daydreaming.

Slits, ribbons, Moroccan styles — they all go into his lingerie, the things he began designing for women three years ago when he remembered how amusing it was to do lingerie.

"I first worked for Dior in '60 and my first assignment was to design lingerie. I had no clue what it was about," he says in French-accented English.

Still, his drawings pleased Dior and when the couturier began a separate lingerie line, Sanchez was put in charge of it.

"That's how I got to America. Then I forgot about lingerie and started working for Revillon and did furs for about 12 years. Sensuality is very important with both furs and lingerie," he explains, smiling. "They represent a strange status of luxury, a bit of the forbidden."

ANYWAY, THREE years ago he suddenly remembered how amusing lingerie was. So he did some.

"I never thought it would work, but it filled a need that existed. Women wanted to wear very glamorous, sexy things at home."

So he supplied them with exotic, sensual nightgowns and robes and then, before he knew it — just as if he rubbed one of those strange lamps that look like teapots — he was creating complementary jackets, tops, bikinis, pants, bras.

Women, the right women, began buying; the right magazines began showing and now Sanchez has the Genie of Success right where he wants him. He can do simply what amuses him.

Tall, fair, sinewy and sophisticated, surely an intimate of the ladies who enjoy amusing little lunches at $50 a head, he says, "I don't pay any attention if my things are accepted or not."

"Are they logical for the time I'm living in, do they fit women's needs?" he muses, jaw firm, chin tilted.

"You come out of the shower or out of bed and you need something to wear. It might as well be pretty."

IN FACT, there's no doubt about it. "You have to be very pretty and young in the morning because it always helps not to have too bad an impression when you have that first look in the mirror," he says, smiling.

To that end, he sticks to white for sleepwear, his own and the ladies'. "I find white the freshest color to sleep in and in my line, the basic items are white. You find color in the additions, the pants, jackets, etc."

In one instance, you will find the colors of the desert. "I show a white cotton caftan with a blue jacket and black pants cut like Moroccan peasant pants. Those are the colors of the Sahara."

"I've always been attracted to those countries," he continues, "because I was born in Spain and as a child living there, the Moors were like the Indians in America. Their lifestyle is all over Spain."

BUT HE WANTS it clearly understood — chin rising — that he's not imitating anybody, certainly not the Moors.

"In the long run, I've never tried to do any of those clothes. Cultural references should be digested, rethought and then recreated."

And that's about it from Fernando Sanchez who laughed with little humor at questions about his age — "That's irrelevant to fashion" — and his family. "What my father did has nothing to do with fashion." Smile. Then, "He was a businessman interested in medicine and literature and philosophy, and my mother was the daughter of a shipowner."

Which means his interest in designing was not genetic.

"No. I just always drew dresses, even when I was in school."

There. You see? Even then, his head was full of fantasies and images.

Which reminds us of the price range of his lingerie line. We learned it goes from $18 to $350.

Seersucker practical for summer

With the revival of many of the traditional fabrics in men's wear, it is not surprising to see the return of seersucker coats for summer wear.

Also, with the current popularity of double-breasted jackets, it is not surprising to see that style being shown in this fabric.

One version with a cool, updated air is the easy-fitting, six-button model designed by John Wertz for Palm Beach. A boldly striped, polyester-cotton is a practical choice for this summer garment, combining easy care with a casually smart look.

READERS ASK:

Dear Mr. Juster: Our daughter is being married late in June. It will be an evening wedding, and my husband thinks the men should wear white formal jackets. The groom's mother likes tuxedos and says the groom and best man should wear that attire and the rest dress as they wish. Your help, please. — Mrs. T.J.H.

I hope you'll all still be on speaking terms at the wedding! Although white formal jackets are preferred in the summer, tuxedos can be worn. Whatever the choice, however, all the men in the wedding party must wear the same attire.

P.S. What does the bride say? After all, it's her wedding.

For the leaflet, "Dress Pointers," send 10 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Harry Juster, in care of Suburban Living, Pad-dock Publications, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006.

Dear Mr. Juster: When buying swim trunks, I understand it is better to buy a size larger than the normal waist size.

I have a 32-inch waist, so should I buy a size 34 trunk? — F.L.

Where did you get this size guide for swim wear? Swim trunks are designed to fit according to your waist size. The only time to go larger is in the event your seat proportions are considerably over average. In that case, one size larger would give more seat room.

Dear Mr. Juster: Whenever I see the term "khaki" used, it intrigues me. This is such an odd word and I have wondered where it originated and what it really means. Can you satisfy this curiosity of mine?—R.L.

Khaki is the Hindu word for dusty and was originally used to describe the dusty-tan cotton fabric which was the standard uniform cloth for the Anglo-Indian army. In time, it became common practice to refer to army uniforms tailored of tightly woven, lightweight fabrics in these tones as "khakis."

CLOTHES-ING NOTE — We ran across this tip for mature men by the Men's Fashion Association: "When picking color combinations, try for the harmony of a symphony orchestra, not the cacophony of a rock band." That's putting it well, musically speaking. In fact, you could say it is sound advice that is worth while listening to. Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1977

They're back to natural

Casing the current hair styles

by ELLIE GROSSMAN

Here you've got Farrah Fawcett-Majors there you've got Dorothy Hamill.

And scurrying to their hairdressers for the jungle look of one or the tossability of the other are women everywhere.

Which they choose — assuming they're drawn to either — says something about them which Dr. Judith Waters is in a position to ponder.

She's a psychologist on the faculty of Brooklyn College with a special interest in physical appearance.

But first a disclaimer.

"I wouldn't invest too much psychological meaning in every hair style that comes along," she says. "Styles are pushed by the media and very often husbands want their wives to be in fashion."

VERY OFTEN the wives themselves want that, although more often today women want one style they can play with, pull back, pin up, let down. "We want to jog during the day and go out at night and we won't be prevented from taking an active part in life because we can't do a thing with our hair."

Okay, let's get to Fawcett-Majors and Hamill, hyphenated names first.

For openness, "Farrah's style isn't threatening to men," Dr. Waters says. "You have to spend a lot of time on hair like that which implies a return to the traditional role of women." The idle, unliberated lady at home dallying with her tresses.

"AND IT'S MORE openly sexual than a lot of other hairstyles. Men can run their fingers through it, they can touch it," and that, she says, speaks of reality rather than artificiality.

"We were involved for a long time with teased hairdos that couldn't be touched and had to be wrapped at night. You could go into a beauty salon every week and the operator wouldn't know if you were coming or going. If your hair isn't touched, what kind of life are you living? If you don't comb it from one week to the next, you're more concerned with superficiality than reality."

DOROTHY HAMMILL'S brunette tresses and Farrah Fawcett-Majors' highlighted blonde hair both suggest reality rather than untouchable artificiality, says Dr. Judith Waters, psychologist and college professor.

So Farrah's hair style shirks of tradition, sensuality and down to shoulders realism.

HER HAIR COLOR says other things. Treading carefully here — if the shade is natural, then its blondeness connotes childhood with its "innocent, virginal look."

"That, incidentally, is why Alfred Hitchcock likes to use blondes in his films," Dr. Waters says. "Blood on blondes has more shock value."

Grishness aside, natural blonde hair also makes you look younger. "But," she cautions, "we wouldn't like to see Farrah's style on Marlene Dietrich, for instance, because that would say — here's a person who can't let go of youth." And that's disturbing to the young who dread ending up that way themselves.

CONTINUING WITH COLOR, when you get to blatantly bottled blondeness, "You're dealing with part of a total package. You don't do your hair one way and dress another. If you see long, bleached blonde hair along with hot pants and hip boots, say, you're pretty sure you have a certain kind of person because we attribute traits to people based on their appearance."

There's nothing wrong with bottled sun, of course — Dr. Waters openly admits to streaking her own brown hair — but the less artificial it appears, the better.

And the more gradually you effect the change, the better, perhaps.

"SOMETIMES A drastic change in hair color is threatening to people," she says. "You may not be trustworthy any longer. If you show up at a church supper suddenly as a blonde, every woman will pull her husband away."

The chances of their pulling them away from the Dorothy Hamill look, however, need scarcely be mentioned.

First, Ms. Hamill is a brunette and that says she's eminently trustworthy. "Because the color is natural, brunettes are thought to be more stable," the doctor explains.

AND THESE DAYS, the shortness of her hair indicates only a desire for manageability and a flattering silhouette. It holds none of the meaning that short hair, well, very short hair, has held in the past.

"Nuns as well as recluses cut their hair as a symbol of giving up their interest in sexuality and worldly goods," she says. "The hair is a direct link to the genitals. That's why men think they're losing their sexual powers when they lose their hair."

Finally, like Farrah's hair style, Dorothy Hamill's can also be touched and run through with fingers. What's more, it can be washed and dried quickly, neatly tucked under a ski cap, pinned behind the ears, speckled with ribbons and daffodils and generally had a very good time with.

The doctor says

Combining of drugs done with caution

A year ago I had open heart surgery (four coronary artery bypasses). A vein was taken from my leg and used to bypass the obstructions in the arteries to my heart.

When I left the hospital I was given a rather rigid fat-free, salt-free diet program, which I have followed for a year.

Then I had a check-up and my cholesterol level was up to 329. For several years before I had my surgery I was taking Atromid-S three times a day. After surgery I was put on a blood thinner (Coumadin). Now because of my high cholesterol my doctor has put me back on Atromid-S and reduced my Coumadin.

I have reduced my weight by 20 pounds and weigh 140. I'm 5 feet 8 and am 62 years old.

What I need to know from you is will the combination of Atromid-S and Coumadin reduce my serum cholesterol level and is it safe to take these two medications at the same time?

Atromid-S is often used in patients who do not respond ideally to dietary measures. It does help in some cases, prolonging the clotting mechanisms of the blood to some extent. Since Coumadin is used to prolong the clotting mechanisms (thin the blood) there is some caution required in using Coumadin and Atromid-S together. However, your doctor has decreased your dose of Coumadin to compensate for this.

The blood tests have the final word in deciding how much Coumadin is to be given. If the mechanism is too prolonged, the medicines have to be reduced. As long as you are followed regularly there is no reason why you can't take both medicines.

Keep in mind that aspirin will increase the bleeding tendency and Tylenol also increases the action of Coumadin. You should be careful about taking any of these medicines on your own.

Single cholesterol determinations often are not too reliable. That is why researchers often like to take more than one test before deciding just what a person's true level is. It can also be affected by stress. Students getting ready for an exam may have a high level that returns to normal after the stress.

I can't say how much benefit you will get from the Atromid-S, but it is worth trying. I would also urge you to get rid of every ounce of fat you can. Often the true benefits of eliminating fat are not obtained because people don't lose enough. When there is a clear medical indication for doing so, I think a person should get down to the point where you can feel little or no fat under the skin. That is when the real benefits are seen.

To give you more information on cholesterol levels I am sending you The Health Letter number 1-2, Cholesterol, Triglycerides, Blood Fats, Atherosclerosis. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it.

I presume you do not smoke. It is very important after such heart surgery to lose weight when necessary, not smoke, and if a person's condition permits, start a sensible exercise program — specifically walking. Exercise sometimes helps to control these problems.

Remove wax buildup with soap, steel wool

Dear Dorothy: I have quite a wax buildup on my TV-stereo combination. I've been using a spray wax which contains some silicone, and when I get through waxing there are still fingerprints and blotches showing up. — Mrs. Doris Bagby

Spray waxes containing silicone sometimes are hard to remove from wood that is at all porous. If the surface of your set is not porous, you ought to be able to clean off the wax buildup with 0000 steel wool dipped in tepid white household soap suds, then squeezed to get rid of excess moisture. Rinse, then dry. Do small sections at a time. Then apply a good cream wax, following directions explicitly. Be sure you have the right kind of steel wool — 0000 — the only kind used by refinishers when they work with wood.

Dear Dorothy: We've just been up to open up and air out our summer cottage and were excited to find no trace of mildew in the places it was often found. Thanks to one of your suggestions, I had sprinkled borax everywhere where mildew used to form. What a good way to start the summer! — Mrs. J. W. Keating.

And thank you for reporting back. It will help others.

Dear Dorothy: Speaking in terms of protein, which is the better buy — large eggs at 70 cents a dozen, or extra large at 85 cents? — Kathy Dolan

The standard home economist's formula is that since the difference is less than seven cents, the extra large are the better buy.

Dear Dorothy: If you can use color remover on washables, why can't you whiten yellowed nylons? Joyce White

You can.

(Mrs. Ritz welcomes questions and hints. If a personal reply is required, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Write to her in care of Suburban Living, Paddock Publications, Box 286, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006.)

Weddings

Debbi Dahlberg— Steven Jaacks

When Debbi Dahlberg of Rolling Meadows became a bride May 1, she wore her mother's white lace wedding gown and a full-length veil attached to a lace cap.

She and Steven Jaacks of Palatine exchanged vows and rings at 3 p.m. in Bethel Lutheran Church, Palatine. Later there was a reception at the Millionaires Club, with 190 guests attending.

The bride's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Dahlberg and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jaacks.

DEBBI'S SISTER, Donna, was her maid of honor, attired in a jade green gown and carrying yellow and white daisies. Her cousin, Pamela Jedd of Chicago, was bridesmaid along with Kris Banstfield, Rolling Meadows, and Jackie Hepler of Wisconsin. They wore ensembles identical to Donna's but Pam was in coral, Kris in peach and Jackie in lime green. Their bouquets were identical.

The bride chose a bouquet of white orchids, roses and stephanotis.

Flower girl for the nuptials was Brenda Pershang, 6, of Mount Prospect, a cousin of the bride. She wore blue and white dotted swiss and carried yellow and white daisies. Ring bearer was 3-year-old Mike Ahnen, Debbi's cousin from Palatine.

DAN JAACKS served as his brother's best man. Groomsmen included Scott Dahlberg and Randy Robertson, Rolling Meadows, and Charles Laing, Palatine.

Making their home in Mundelein, Debbi works at Lincoln Federal Savings and Loan, Hoffman Estates and Steven for IBM in Chicago. Both are area high school graduates, the bride from Rolling Meadows and the groom from St. Victor.

Mr. and Mrs. Steven Jaacks

Mr. and Mrs. Jeffrey Allerman

Robin Lea Blake— Jeffrey Allerman

Graduates of Marietta (Ohio) College, Robin Lea Blake and Jeffrey John Allerman were married April 16 in the First United Methodist Church of Palatine.

The bride is the daughter of the Julian W. Blakes of Palatine and the groom the son of the Kenneth J. Allermans of Kinnelon, N.J.

The newlyweds are making their home in Westfield Center, Ohio, where Jeff is employed by Westfield Companies. He graduated from Marietta in '75 and Robin in '76.

FOR THEIR 2:30 p.m. wedding, Robin chose Melinda Mayer, Cleveland Heights, Ohio, as maid of honor and Jeff's brother, Kurt, was best man.

Bridesmaids were Raneae Blake and Tracey Allerman, the couple's sisters, along with Leeann Wulff, Parma, Ohio. Groomsmen were the bride's brothers, Randy and Jeff, and George Wunne, Kinnelon.

A reception at Indian Lakes Country Club feted the bridal pair after the double ring rites. They then spent a short honeymoon at Interlaken, Wis.

Couples will wed this summer

McMullan-Stansbury

Two graduates of the University of Wyoming, Ann McMullan and Dean Stansbury, are engaged and planning an August wedding. Their news comes from Ann's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard McMullan of Ogallala, Neb.

Dean is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Donn Stansbury of Arlington Heights and graduated from Arlington High School before going west.

The couple are both pharmacists in Casper, Wyo.

Ellithorpe-Newberry

Virginia Ann Ellithorpe and Roger E. Newberry plan to live in Mackinaw, Ill., following their wedding in July. Their engagement has been announced by Virginia's parents, the Robert S. Ellithorpes of Hoffman Estates.

Roger is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Newberry of Mackinaw. He is employed in Morton, Ill., at the Caterpillar Tractor Co. Virginia has a degree in elementary education from Illinois State University.

Mischler-Perry

The engagement of Marilyn Mischler to Scott Perry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Perry of Myrtle Park, Ill., is announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Mischler of Palatine. The wedding takes place in August.

Marilyn graduated from Palatine High School and Illinois State University and now teaches in Carpentersville. Her fiancé, a Hersey High graduate, attended Culver-Stockton College, Canton, Mo., and is employed by Frontier Construction Co., Prospect Heights.

Wickstrom-Hughes

Lorie Ruth Wickstrom will be an August bride, according to an engagement announcement made by her parents, the Harry L. Wickstroms of Arlington Heights. Her fiancé is Gary C. Hughes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Hughes of Dundee.

Lorie is a 1972 graduate of Arlington High School, and both she and Gary are 1976 graduates of Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill. She is presently teaching mathematics in a Davenport, Iowa, grade school. Gary will enter Montana State University graduate school in September.

Nancy Perschbacher

Auxiliary ends successful year

Holy Family Hospital Auxiliary recently closed its most successful year by presenting a check to the hospital for $58,000. The presentation was made by Winne McCall, Mount Prospect, president, at a buffet supper. The money will go toward the purchase of hospital equipment.

Installed as new president of the auxiliary was Nancy Perschbacher of Arlington Heights. Vice presidents installed were Grayce Zbikowski and Florence Villadonga, Mount Prospect. Secretaries are Rose Jonas, Des Plaines, and Yetta Welch, Mount Prospect, and treasurer is Lorene Stach, Glenview.

Next on the agenda

Women's Association, Church of the Cross, United Presbyterian, Hoffman Estates, 9:15 a.m. Wednesday for Bible study or craft project. At 10:15, the Great Frame-Up of Schaumburg demonstrates picture framing. Baby-sitters provided. 885-1190.

La Leche League of Elk Grove Village, 8 p.m. Thursday in home of Mrs. Ron Harper. Mrs. Paul Swanson to lead breastfeeding discussion. Babies welcome. 640-1729.

Harper offers jazz exercise course

Barbara Karp of Arlington Heights will teach a four-week course, Jazz Exercises for Women, for the Harper College Women's Program this summer on the Palatine campus, U building, Room 101.

The course will be offered Mondays and Wednesdays from 11 a.m. to 12:15 p.m., beginning June 6. Tuition is $14. Those interested should call the college admissions office at 397-3000, ext. 410.

Coddington-Tackenberg

A July wedding is planned by Denise L. Coddington and Steven C. Tackenberg. The couple's engagement and approaching marriage are announced by Denise's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur L. Coddington, Arlington Heights. Steven is the son of Mrs. L. M. Tackenberg, Elgin.

Denise is a '74 graduate of Arlington High School. She is now studying at Harper College and employed by Respiratory Care, Inc., Arlington Heights. Steven studies at Elgin Community College and is employed by Gould, Inc., Addison.

Graham-Kozak

The engagement of Kathleen Edda Graham to William Edward Kozak, son of the William Kozaks of Brigham City, Utah, is announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Graham of Mount Prospect. The wedding is planned for June.

A '68 graduate of Prospect High School, Kathleen then earned bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Illinois and is a counselor at Centralia Community College, Centralia, Wash. Her fiancé, graduated in '70 from the U.S. Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn., is a lieutenant in the civil engineering branch of the Coast Guard, stationed in Seattle, Wash.

Sophia — last of the goddesses

by VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — When you enter her presence there is a distinct aura of the goddess about Sophia Loren, who is perhaps the last of the screen variety.

Grace Kelly certainly was once such, as were Audrey Hepburn, Greta Garbo and Katharine Hepburn — all larger than life women who adorned the screen and their personal lives with a certain regal atmosphere.

Sophia had just deplaned from Rome and would be departing within a few hours for Italy to resume work in a new movie.

JET LAG and all, she was a queen perched on a chair in her hotel bungalow. Her black silk blouse revealed the striking Loren bosom. Her enormous, luminous brown eyes were more dramatic than ever.

Sophia, 42 and many pounds slim-mer than when she first visited Hollywood 20 years ago, is more hauntingly beautiful than ever.

Asked how she managed to survive as a superstar while many of her contemporaries have retired, she displayed a surprising self-assurance. "I always survive," she said. "And I always will because I'm honest in my work. The films may not always be good but I always do the best I can. I think that shows up on the screen and audiences appreciate."

THIS IS the first time I've visited Hollywood since 1962. That time it was to pick up the Oscar I'd won the year before. I haven't worked here for longer than I can remember.

Her trips to Southern California were solely for the purpose of making four movies. When she completed a film Sophia headed right back to Italy. Now she may find herself moving to Hollywood permanently.

Although Sophia and her husband, producer Carlo Ponti, own a showcase villa near Rome, she makes her permanent residence in Paris. Now Ponti, whose production headquarters remain in Italy, is ready to pull up stakes. Taxes, unions and government meddling have driven him to the wall. Relocating in Hollywood will mean an entirely different lifestyle for the actress.

"I LIVE apart from show business in Paris," Sophia said. "There is no motion picture colony there."

"My friends and acquaintances are from other walks of life. Of course, when a good friend like Richard Burton comes to town he pays a visit. But that is the exception rather than the rule."

"We are not accustomed to seeing other performers socially. In Hollywood movie people work together and then spend a great deal of time together away from the studios."

"I've never lived here. But when I was working in Hollywood films I got to know many, many actors. I was thrilled to meet Gary Cooper, my favorite. And I would see Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn, Danny Kaye and Fred Astaire at parties."

"CARLO WANTS to make more Hollywood pictures now, so it is possible my life will see some changes."

Sophia recently completed two new movies, "Cassandra Crossing," her first American-financed picture in three years, and "Angela," which was made in Montreal last October.

She interrupted her starring role in Marcello Mastroianni's new film "A Particular Day" to come to Hollywood to receive an award.

"I'll only miss one day of work," she said, smiling. "When I arrive in Rome I go directly to the studio to work. Thank God it is a very dramatic scene in which I'm supposed to look tired and weak."

"I've been here only 12 hours and I've had a surprising number of movie projects offered me. But I am really careful about scripts. I'm waiting for a picture in which the woman is the focal point of the story."

IT'S SOPHIA'S dream to star in Tolstoy's classic tragedy, "Anna Karenina," which Garbo did some 40 years ago.

"I've always admired Garbo," Sophia said. "She was really a movie creature, born for films. She had all the qualifications to play the role. I think I do too."

champ broke Steve Schellenberger's year-old mark of 1:49.9. Heroux, a runnerup for second year in a row, clocked his fastest time ever with a 1:50.06. (Photo by Craig Camp)

Indians' Eckersley registers no-hitter

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Flame-throwing Dennis Eckersley, Cleveland's fastest right arm since Bob Feller, pitched the second no-hitter of the major league season Monday night, striking out 12 batters en route to a 1-0 victory over the California Angels.

Eckersley, who hurled 7-2/3 hitless innings at the conclusion of his last start against Seattle — making his streak of hitless innings now 15-2/3, needed only a squeeze bunt RBI single by Jim Norris with one out in the first to outduel another noted fast-ball artist, Frank Tanana. Norris' bunt scored Duane Kuiper, who had tripled.

A sparse holiday crowd of 13,400 in mammoth Municipal Stadium was on its feet with every pitch in the ninth inning as Eckersley, now 5-3, completed the first Indian no-hit effort since Dick Bosman performed the feat against the Oakland A's July 19, 1974. Feller, a Hall of Famer, hurled three no hitters for the Indians, which stood as a modern record before California's Nolan Ryan pitched four.

RYAN WATCHED Eckersley's near perfect performance from the Angels' dugout. Eckersley walked only one, Tony Solaita with two out in the first and permitted just one other baserunner. That was Bobby Bonds who struck out to start the eighth but reached base on a wild pitch third strike. Bonds, however, was quickly erased when Eckersley induced Don Baylor to bounce into a double play.

Fans mobbed the field in the ninth after Eckersley, who pitched to only 28 batters, smoked a third strike past Gil Flores for the final out. He has started the inning by fanning Bobby Grich and then nailed pinch hitter Willie Mays Aikens on a routine fly to Paul Dade in left field.

Eckersley threw 117 pitches in the game and now has 66 strikeouts in 21-2/3 innings this year.

Tanana, whose record is now 8-2, pitched well himself. Aside from Kuiper's triple, he yielded only four other hits, walked one and struck out six.

ECKERSLEY, WHO signed with the

ters in a season prior to reaching the age of 22.

The only previous no-hitter in the majors this season was pitched by Jim Colborn of the Kansas City Royals against the Texas Rangers on May 14. The last pitcher to throw a nine-inning no-hitter in the American League before that was Ryan, his fourth, against Baltimore June 1, 1975.

ECKERSLEY JOINS some very select company in Cleveland, where he is now the 11th Indian to fashion a no-hitter. In addition to Feller, Bob Lemon, Sonny Siebert and Don Black are among the others to hold the enemy hitless.

Adrian Joss fired a pair of 1-0 no hitters against Chicago in 1903 and 1910 and is the only other Indian in addition to Feller to record more than one of the hurling gems.

Eckersley was born in Oakland, Calif., and played baseball, basketball and football at Washington High in Fremont, compiling a 23-6 prep pitching mark. He was a No. 3 selection in the June 1972 free agent draft and pitched a shutout in his professional debut at Reno, Nev. a short time later.

Indians in 1972 for a reported $72,000 bonus as the No. 3 draft choice in June of that year, demonstrated potential on many occasions but had yet to achieve the greatness often predicted for him.

Last year, after an outstanding rookie campaign of 13-7 with a 2.60 earned run average, Eckersley got off to a bad start and was banished to the bullpen at the All Star break. However, he came back with an excellent second half of the season, winding up 13-12 while becoming only the eighth pitcher in history to strike out 200 batters.

Prospect hosts title test today

by KEITH REINHARD

It will be a new experience now... no matter who wins the Mid-Suburban League baseball championship.

Prospect and Buffalo Grove — two teams which have never claimed the MSL's diamond title — will square off for the honor at the Knight field today at 4:30.

If the Bison win, it's all over. If Prospect is triumphant, the showdown will be extended another day. This is according to the rules of the league which makes it a best-of-three series and includes the game played during the regular season.

BUFFALO GROVE won that regularly scheduled crossover contest, 5-1 but Prospect skipper Larry Pahlman feels it could be a different story this time around.

"I think the circumstances will make for a better ball game now," Pahlman pointed out. "We were aware of the importance of the last Buffalo Grove game but the kids just didn't play with determination."

The Knight coach noted that his club had just come off a heart-breaking loss in the sectional playoffs and had been through a grueling portion of their schedule. "We had played something like six games in seven days. Buffalo Grove was definitely rested and waiting for us."

BISON MENTOR Fred Van Iken sees today's contest as a whole new ballgame too. "Prospect didn't show us much that day, but I think they'll be a lot better prepared this time. The pressure is more on them, of course, because they have to win two but they'll have the home field advantage for this next one and their record shows them as the best team in the league."

Prospect takes a 14-4 mark into the match and Pohlman has nominated unbeaten (5-0) Jim McDonald as his starting twirler.

Van Iken is countering with Phil Czonsnyka, also unblemished at 5-0. The Bison take a 12-5 slate into the game.

"Phil has done a super job for us this season and I feel really confident with him on the mound," the Grove coach continued. "I also feel that we'll have momentum on our side after getting off to a pretty slow start this season."

THE LAST TWO years Arlington and Rolling Meadows have battled it out for the loop title with the Mustangs winning on both occasions.

Prospect has come close to a berth in the playoffs since 1972 although before that their best effort was in 1967 when they fashioned a 10-3-1 behind the pitching of Tom Lundstedt and Dave Kingman to place runnerup to Maine West at 13-1.

In 1973 the Knights were second in the South at 10-6 to Forest View with a 13-3 record. The Falcons again beat them out, by a game, for the 1974 divisional crown.

Buffalo Grove has only been in the circuit for four years, but they made a serious run on the Cardinals for the North title last spring. Arlington finished at 15-2 and the Bison were 13-4.

St. Louis romps, 14-0

Cards rip Cubs' pitchers

ST. LOUIS — The Cubs were reminded even first-placers have bad days as the St. Louis Cardinals crushed Chicago 14-0 behind the six-hit pitching of Pete Falcone here Monday afternoon.

The lop-sided victory nudged the Cardinals, who have scored 37 runs against the Cubs in their last two meetings, to within two games of the division-leaders. The teams meet here again tonight.

The Cardinals cracked 21 hits off a succession of five Cubs' pitchers, the first of which was Mike Krukow, now 4-3. He lasted just four innings, yielding four runs.

IT WAS OFF relievers Don Moore and Jimmy Todd, though, the Cardinals did the biggest damage by rocking the hurlers for nine runs on nine hits in the sixth. Thirteen batters came to hit in the marathon inning, the worst the Cubs have suffered this season.

Falcone, now 2-5, picked up his first complete game of the season, fanning no one and walking one batter. Three of the six hits off him were by hot-hitting Jerry Morales, who had two doubles.

The Cardinals used the artificial turf at Busch Memorial Stadium as their 10th player early in the game by bouncing several base hits through the Cubs' infield to fuel early rallies. St. Louis collected hits in every inning, scoring in four of those frames.

Lou Brock, just 22 stolen bases away from surpassing the all-time career record of Ty Cobb, drove in four runs with four hits before getting lifted late in the game. Teammate Ken Reitz also had four hits, including a two-run home run in the sixth, his third in three games.

CUBS' PITCHERS have served little more than batting practice to the Cards the last two outings between the teams. April 27, St. Louis bombed Chicago 23-3 at Wrigley Field. Monday, Cubs pitchers helped St. Louis out by uncorking four wild pitches and walking four, two in-tionally.

Bill Bonham, 6-3, is scheduled to go against Cards' ace John Denny, 6-0, in today's game, beginning at 7:30 p.m. For Wednesday's series finale, Rick Reuschel of the Cubs and Larry Dierker of the Cards will throw.

The loss put an end to the Cubs' five game winning streak, which stretched through a three-game sweep of the Pittsburgh Pirates at Wrigley Field over the weekend. After concluding the series with St. Louis, the Cubs will travel to Pittsburgh for a rematch with the Pirates in a three-game series beginning Friday.

White Sox split; Stone takes 6th

by BOB GALLAS

White Sox pitcher Steve Stone doesn't have to be told of the value of juggling. He already knows.

The righthander won his sixth game of the season Sunday as the Sox won the nightcap of a twinbill, 8-3 over Milwaukee after dropping the opener 4-3. And he credits his success to running a mile a day.

"The most games I've ever completed in a season is six and now I have six complete games after 10 starts," said Stone who is now 6-3 for the year and has won his last five starts in a row. "I really think the added leg strength has made the difference."

STONE HAS BEEN a model of consistency for the Sox. In 10 starts this year, he has never given up more than three runs per game. He's yielded three runs in each of his last five games, all of which were wins.

"I just tell the guys to go out there and score four runs and we'll win. If they score two runs, we lose," Stone quipped.

Stone struck out eight during his nine innings, which was also a season high. He gave up a ninth inning solo home run to pinch hitter Mike Hegan.

"With the big lead I just started laying the ball in there," said Stone, who walked only one.

THE BIG SOX inning was the sixth when they scored four runs and batted around after the first two up in the frame were retired. Milwaukee starter Ed Rodriguez issued three consecutive walks and LaMar Johnson, Al Bannister and Jorge Orta followed consecutive singles off reliever Bob McClure to give the Sox a 7-2 edge. A triple by Jim Spencer and a sacrifice pop to the first baseman down the rightfield line made it 8-2.

Nastase tops Kodes in Paris net tourney

PARIS—Ilie Nastase, turning to his greatest talent rather than his theatrics, defeated his perennial rival Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia 6-4, 7-5, 6-3 Monday to reach the quarter-finals of the $300,000 French Tennis Championships.

Playing the most exciting tennis at this year's tournament so far, the mercurial Romanian forsook his usual role of clown to unleash a stream of unstopable shots that left Kodes for once flat-footed.

In the previous match, Phil Dent became the first Australian to reach the last eight at the French championships since 1970 when Italian-based Martin Mulligan achieved the feat. Dent, using his big serve to full advantage, went through New Zealand's Brian Fairlie 6-0, 6-2, 6-4.

American Stan Smith, playing his best tennis for four years, reached the last 16 with a 6-4, 6-2, 5-7, 7-6 win against another Czech, Jiri Krbec.

The match was called at 5-5 in the fourth set after three hours Sunday night because of bad light. It took Smith just nine minutes to conclude it with some devastating volleying which won him the tie-breaker 7-1.

Car accident kills Blues defenseman

GRAY SUMMIT, Mo. (UPI) — St. Louis Blues' defenseman Bob Gassoff was killed Sunday night in a car-motorcycle crash on a country road near the farm of teammate Garry Unger.

Authorities said Gassoff steered his motorcycle across the center line and collided head-on with a car driven by Douglas Klekamp, 19, of Villa Ridge, Mo. Klekamp was not injured.

A highway patrol spokesman said it was not known why Gassoff had crossed the center line.

Gassoff, 24, was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Francis Hospital in Washington, Mo. He set the team record for penalties during the 1975-76 season, clocking 306 minutes in the penalty box while scoring one goal and 12 assists in 80 games.

Ortner leads women's bowling classic

CHICAGO — Bev Ortner, a veteran bowler from Tucson, Ariz., averaged 215 for six games Monday to take the lead in first-round qualifying at the Professional Women Bowlers Association Columbia 300 Chicago Classic.

Ortner, who has won two PWBA titles since joining the tour in 1965 and rolled a perfect game last week en route to a third-place finish in the Rockford Classic, rolled games of 227, 235, 190, 236, 181 and 222 Monday for a total of 1,291.

Donna Dillon of Fort Worth, Tex., was second, seven pins behind Ortner at 1,284.

Rounding out the top five after the first qualifying round in suburban Morton Grove were Cathy Almeida, Cranston, R.I., at 1,283; Patty Costello, Scranton, Pa., at 1,262; and Cindy Gloggs, an amateur from Lockport, Ill., at 1,237.

Strikes end at Belmont, Agueduct

NEW YORK — The New York Racing Association reached tentative contract agreement Monday with 600 parimutuel clerks following an 11-day strike at Aqueduct and Belmont Park race tracks.

Clerks returned to the betting windows at Belmont in time for the start of Monday's nine-race card, including the $115,900 Metropolitan Handicap which includes three time Horse of the Year, Forego.

An NYRA spokesman said free admission, programs and parking were offered at Belmont Monday — a practice begun last week in an effort to build up attendance during the walkout. The strike began May 19, forcing cancellation of the last two days of Aqueduct's spring racing season.

The agreement with the Independent Association of Mutuel Employees was announced by State Mediation Board Chairman Vincent McDonnell and State Racing Commission Chairman Joseph Tonelli, following a 17½-hour negotiating session.

Heat slims NCAA track record threat

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — The prospect of continued heat makes the prospect of records in all but the shorter events slim for the 56th NCAA track championship opening Tuesday, Illinois Track Coach Gary Weineke speculated Monday.

"Without relief from the heat," Weineke said, "we're not going to have to worry about records in any of the distance events. The temperature is expected to go over 90 every day and anybody over 800 meters is going to feel it."

Wells Twombly, 41, award winning sports columnist for the San Francisco Examiner died Monday from an acute internal disorder.

... The Southern Illinois Salukis used a three-run homer by former Arlington standout George Vukovich to defeat Big Eight champion and pretournament favorite Oklahoma 7-3 and remain the only unbeaten team in the NCAA midwest regional.

Former star San Francisco quarterback John Brodie became the first major American casually when the British Amateur match play golf championship began Monday. ... Houston's McTear won the miteric 500, beating an all-star field that included Olympic gold medalist Hasley Crawford in the Muhammad Ali Invitational Track Meet while the event's namesake could do no better than sixth in a celebrity 100-yard dash.

Dark wins in Padre debut

From Herald Wire Services

Alvin Dark began his fifth managerial stint as head man of the San Diego Padres Monday, and he barely made it in time for the start of a holiday doubleheader with the San Francisco Giants.

Doug Rader, Jerry Turner and Mike Ivie each hit two-run doubles during a seven-run seventh inning rally, that provided the San Diego Padres and Dark with a 12-8 victory of the San Francisco Giants in the first game of a doubleheader.

Dark, who previously served as manager of the Giants, Cleveland Indians and Kansas City and Oakland A's, plus a short stay with the Cubs during the period the club used eight rotating coaches as field leaders, replaced John McNamara as Padres manager.

McNAMARA WAS FIRED Saturday night and Dark, who was a coach under Herman Franks with the Cubs this year, was named Sunday as McNamara's replacement.

Dark wasn't able to make a flight to San Francisco until Monday morning and he arrived at Candlestick Park an hour before the start of the doubleheader with the Giants.

"Of course, I'm happy to get this chance to be a manager again," said Dark, who generally is acknowledged as one of the smartest managers in the big leagues. He led the Giants to their only pennant in San Francisco, rebuilt the pitching staff at Kansas City and Cleveland, and then led the Oakland A's to the 1974 world championship and the 1975 A.L. West title with only two starting pitchers.

DARK APOLOGIZED for not being able to talk with newsmen Monday because he was pressed for time. He huddled with his coaching staff for 30 minutes, then took a few minutes to meet his players.

"I'm going to have to depend on my coaches for a few days," he said, "until I get to know the players a little better. I know there are a lot of good players in this club and we'll see what we can do about turning things around."

The Padres spent millions during the off-season signing catcher Gene Tenace and relief ace Rolie Fingers, both of whom played for Dark in two winning seasons at Oakland, and were regarded as challengers in the N.L. West.

But it hasn't turned out that way.

But it hasn't turned out that way.

Randy Jones, last year's Cy Young Award winner, won only four of 11 starts with a 4.43 earned run average and had the San Diego staff's only complete game by Monday.

DARK'S DEBUT as San Diego skipper saw the Padres pound four San Francisco pitchers for 12 hits and register their third straight victory.

The Giants, who got a pair of home runs from Darrell Evans and a grand slam by rookie Jack Clark in the ninth, took a 2-1 lead into the seventh. But then the Padres, with Rader, Turner and Ivie each hitting two-run doubles and Bill Almon adding an RBI single, scored seven runs for an 8-2 lead. They finished it off with four more runs in the eighth, including a homer by George Hendrick.

Hendrick, who also singled home a run in the fourth, and Merv Rettenmund, with a single in the eighth, were the fourth and fifth Padre players to drive in two runs as Rick Sawyer, who worked only one inning in relief, picked up his fourth victory in eight decisions.

ANDRE DAWSON'S two-run homer in the nightcap staked Stan Bahnsen to his first National League victory and the Montreal Expos to a 5-1, 3-2 doubleheader sweep of the New York Mets.

Tony Perez' two-run homer and Steve Rogers' four-hit pitching carried the Expos to their 5-1 first game victory. It was Perez' sixth homer of the season and it made Rogers' record 6-4.

In the nightcap, Dawson's second homer of the season came after Del Unser reached first on an error by Mets' second baseman Felix Millan. The two-run blow, hit off starter and loser Jackson Todd, now 2-1, gave the Expos a 3-0 lead. Montreal scored in the first inning when, with two out, Gary Carter walked and came around on singles by Perez and Warren Cromartie.

Philadelphia dumped Pittsburgh 6-4 behind Steve Carlton. Tim McCarver drove in three runs.

IN THE MONDAY night nationally televised game the New York Yankees and Mike Torrez held off the Boston Red Sox, 5-4, with Reggie Jackson and Graig Nettles hitting back-to-back home runs in the second inning. Lou Pinella's triple led to another Yankee run in a two-run outburst in the fourth.

Arlington High School product Paul Splittorff allowed five hits to pitch the Kansas City Royals to a 4-1 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays, and Seattle dumped Texas 7-4 in the first game of a doubleheader for its fourth straight win.

Macnider wins at 10,000 meters

Jim Macnider, head cross country coach and assistant in track at Schaumburg High School, won the 10,000 meters run in the United States Track and Field Federation Nationals at Wichita (Kans.) State.

Macnider, representing the Chicago Track Club, was clocked in 30 minutes and 40 seconds.

"Before the race I thought I might have a chance to place," he said. "To win is unbelievable, just great."

The meet featured such world class track and field performers as Dwight Stones in the high jump, Rick Wohluter in the 800 meters, Mac Wilkens in the 5,000 meters, and Craig Virgin in the 5,000 meters.

A. J. FOYT holds a piece of ice to cool off after he won record fourth Indianapolis '500.' At right is Festival Queen Kathy Hegg. The victory for Foyt, 42, was ruled official Monday, and his Coyote racer was promptly retired to the Speedway Museum.

Foyt racing marks to stand for years

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI)—When A. J. Foyt finally decides to quit auto racing — and he isn't about to call it a day — he will leave behind a string of records that may stand for years to come.

Foyt accepted his winnings Monday, 24 hours after grabbing his record fourth 500-mile Speedway race, and in the process pushed his earnings from this old race track alone to more than $1 million.

Foyt also leads most of the other Speedway race statistics and moved from fifth to second — right behind Ralph DePalma — among the lap leaders with 522. DePalma, the winner in 1915, led the race on 613 laps.

THE 42-YEAR-OLD charger from Houston now has won seven 500-mile races under the banner of the United States Auto Club. He won at Pocono in 1973 and 1975 and at Ontario also in 1975.

His list of major triumphs stands at 58 and he is aiming for an unprecedented seventh USAC national driving title. He left no doubt that he will return next May to the scene of his greatest triumphs, presumably in a new car, aiming for Speedway win No. 5.

"I have no plans to retire," he said even before Sunday's race, which was decided when front-running Gordon Johncock's engine conked out with only 16 laps to go.

"I plan to keep on racing another couple of years or so," Foyt added.

THE ONLY CHANGE posted in the final finish gave John Mahler 14th place instead of 15th, a swap of positions with Pancho Carter.

Official statistics also credited Foyt with leading 46 of the 200 laps, including the last 16. Johncock led 129, including 83 the fourth time he paced the field.

NBA finals

Blazers, 76ers play again

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — The Portland Trail Blazers, running faster and shooting better at home, take on the Philadelphia 76ers tonight in game four hoping to tie the NBA championship series at two games apiece.

The 76ers, perhaps a little heady with a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven series, had a mental lapse early in game three Sunday, letting Portland establish the tempo from the start, and the Blazers won 129-107.

"That's something we didn't want to let them do, establish control from the outset," said Philadelphia Coach Gene Shue.

Shue and Portland Coach Jack Ramsay both said the Blazers' "aggressive defense" set up the tempo of the game, with Portland using defense to get the ball and go to the fast break for 36 points in the style of attack that got Portland to the championship matchup.

"THEY GOT a lot of stuff off the fast break," said 76er guard Henry Bibby. "We played into their hands and we did something we didn't want to do in this series. Ever since their Los Angeles series, we knew we couldn't struggle against their pressure, but in the first seven minutes that's what we did Sunday. They forced us to start thinking about pressing."

Asked if the 76ers might resort to their strategy in game one of having center Caldwell Jones and the forwards bring the ball down court, Bibby replied, "Maybe, just maybe."

Portland had but 16 turnovers in game three, a marked contrast to the 34 in game one and 29 in game two. Touted Blazer quickness exerted itself at home, causing Ramsay to say, "I really don't know what it is about home court advantage, and I'm not sure anybody does, but we ran faster in Portland, and Philadelphia ran faster at The Spectrum. Maybe it is the influence of the crowd."

Bill Walton, with back-to-back dunks in eight seconds, turned a four-point Blazer lead into an eight-point margin in the fourth quarter. "That was the turning point of the game," said Shue. Forward Bob Gross made four of the next five Blazer baskets while Philadelphia could get but one bucket, and that was the end for the 76ers.

"WE WERE getting a lot of good steals at the beginning and the end," said Gross. "Late in the game I think it was demoralizing for them to watch us making all those layins. It is yet to be seen if we can continue that pace through the rest of the playoffs."

Walton was asked if he thought Philadelphia could win a game in Portland, where the Blazers have won 16 straight games and lost none in the playoffs. He said, "No game is predetermined. All I know is we have a game here Tuesday night and I don't even know what time it starts." It starts at 8 p.m. (channel 2) and Walton will be on time.

Julius Erving said defense escaped the 76ers in game three, and he said he wasn't surprised at the Blazers' explosion. "I've seen Portland play this way before — the first time we came out here." Portland humiliated the 76ers in that early season contest 146-104.

"It was not a matter of being conscious that they would play that way again," added Erving. "They just wanted it more than we did."

Stone pitches Sox to win

then walloped a two-run homer in his third to break a 1-1 deadlock.

"I asked him (Knapp) if he wanted me to move the runner along and he said no, to go ahead and get a good pitch to hit," said Garr. The homer was his first ever in Comiskey Park and second this year. All four of Garr's homers last year were hit on the road.

CHRIS KNAPP started the first game, but for the second time in his last two starts, was unable to last more than one inning. The young righthander was struck on the left ankle by a line drive off the bat of Von Joshua, which went for a hit. Knapp finished the inning, giving up two runs, but Bart Johnson came out to pitch the second inning.

"I asked to stay in, but Lem said he didn't want to take any chances," said Knapp as he iced down the injury which he said was not painful. "Maybe if I had been going better they'd have taken up the offer."

Johnson put on one of his best performances of the year during his 5-2/3 inning stint, giving up one run on six scattered hits.

"It was a little strange pitching two days in a row," said Johnson, who'd thrown an inning Sunday in New York.

"I don't think I've pitched two days in a row for four or five years."

"I STILL DON'T have real command of my fastball. I'm getting it over the plate but I'm not hitting the spots as well as I'd like."

WAYNE KING, 40, director of the Michigan Big Foot Information Center studies a plaster cast of a footprint left by the legendary and elusive ape-like creature who King believes inhabits the wilds of northeastern Michigan. "I know he exists," said King.

On the trail of Bigfoot

'He's out there, I can sense it'

LAKE ANN, Mich. (UPI) — A twig snapped somewhere below the thickly wooded ridge along the river bank and Wayne King stopped dead in his tracks.

Silently, he swung his 8mm movie camera into position and waited, eyes intensely searching for movement in the forest shadows.

"He's out there. I can sense it," King whispered, adjusting the tripod on his camera.

HE STOOD ready to record the moment he'd spent 27 years preparing for — a face-to-face encounter with Bigfoot, a legendary ape-like creature who King believes inhabits the wilds of northwestern Michigan.

Ten minutes passed with no sound, no movement, no Bigfoot. King and his three companions moved on.

"I'm not disappointed, because I know he exists," said King, an auto worker who operates the Michigan Bigfoot Information Center from the basement of his home near Flint.

"EVEN THOUGH I've never seen him, there is plenty of solid evidence, eyewitness accounts, proof that Bigfoot, or Sasquatch as the Indians call him, is in Michigan. And some day, I don't know when or where, I'm going to find him."

Other Bigfoot sightings have been reported in recent years in the Pacific Northwest from northern California to British Columbia.

King, 40, spends his weekends in the woods, following leads reported to the information center. Sometimes he is accompanied by his "field man," Nathan Blake-more, 24, a fellow worker at the Flint Chevrolet plant, who also admits to being a "Bigfoot believer."

"I'm no Bigfoot hunter," King said with a firm look. "I don't want to hurt him. I only want to prove he exists so we can get some laws to protect him."

The latest "hot spot" in his ongoing search is Benzie County near the Platte River and the Lower Woodcock, an idyllic lake where a fisherman recently reported hearing a series of eerie whistling screams that King ascribes to Bigfoot.

"NEVER BEFORE in my life have I heard a sound like that," the fisherman, Abe Roorda, 30, told King. "It must have had lungs bigger than mine. It was almost human."

A week earlier, King was following another lead about a half mile from the Lower Woodcock when he discovered 12 large footprints spaced in 7 to 8 feet strides.

He made a plaster cast of one print that he said "clearly shows the padded foot of a 600 to 800-pound primate. Definitely not a bear. No claw marks."

In another part of the county in 1974, a man and his teen-age daughter ran off the road one night to avoid hitting a tall hairy man-like creature who stepped in front of their car, King said.

A year ago, a Flint couple vacationing in the area found giant footprints in the snow that King described as "those of a large humanoid." The same couple earlier this year reported hearing a strange scream in the woods accompanied by a strong garbage odor that Bigfoot experts associate with the creature.

IN ALL, KING said, he has received 40 "solid pieces of evidence" including eight sightings of Bigfoot in Michigan over the past four years.

This time out, King found no signs of Bigfoot to back up Roorda's account. So he packed his gear and drove to a nearby cafe for a lunch of coffee and cigarettes before heading home.

Thanks to a series of daily "Bigfoot reports," on a local radio station, word of King's presence preceded him to the cafe. He was handed a message asking him to inspect some tracks found by mushroom hunters in a woods a few miles away.

"Look at the size of that," King said, gently probing a 15-inch long foot-shaped impression. It was one of about 40 widely spaced prints that stretched out over some 300 yards before trailing off into the dense woods.

"How can you dispute evidence like this?" King said gleefully. He dispatched Blake-more to fetch the plaster while he posed for pictures beside the print.

"A good find," he said. "Not as good as finding Bigfoot in the flesh. Seems like I'm always a step behind him. But someday he and I are going to shake hands. I just hope I have my camera with me."

Champion tinkerer points with pride to water wheels

by CHARLES S. TAYLOR

BUCKHEAD, Ga. (UPI) — When the lights went out in Buckhead (pop. 179) recently, Gordon Brewer's country store and service station was the only place in the village with electricity for three days.

His lights continued to burn, he could still pump gas. His giant water wheels hardly missed a turn.

Brewer's store, a mile off Interstate 20 and 65 miles east of Atlanta, nestles in the quiet of a rural crossroads. An occasional freight train blowing for the crossing is the only disruption.

It is easy to hear the peaceful squeaking and ticking of the eight-foot water wheels as they turn, one atop the other, between a scaffolding of huge pine poles next to Brewer's store. The wheels lift the water into the air.

People standing nearby sometimes get wet. A steady stream of water shoots onto the wheels from the open mouth of a large green ceramic frog.

THIS IS THE heart of Buckhead and the water wheels — although they produce no power — are the main attractions, the creation of Morgan County's champion tinkerer, expert electrician, jack-of-all-trades.

Tourists, who occasionally drift in, stop to look at them while they buy gas or one of Mrs. Brewer's own three-layer cakes.

The wheels are conversation pieces. The conservation usually gets around to why they are there. It requires electricity to run them and the only water to be seen is piped into a large trough under the wheels.

"My granddaddy had a water wheel at Cornelia (Ga.) where he ground corn," said the genial, 68-year-old Brewer. "I've wanted one all my life."

"This is mostly for show," he said, waving toward the slowly turning wheels.

Across the road from his store, Brewer opened the door of a structure containing several old refrigerators, auto and engine parts, assorted junk and four smoothly-functioning electric generators.

HE CRANKED THEM up, one by one, and the noise drowned out all conversation. Brewer was well-fixed in case of power failures. The generators furnished the power for all the lights in the storehouse and for emergency use at his place of business and nearby home.

"A tree fell across the Georgia Power lines several days ago and the electricity was off for three nights," said Brewer. "I was the only one around here who had lights."

Next to Brewer's generator room, was a collection from bygone days — wagon and buggy wheel spokes of Hickory, a crosscut saw, a 10-gallon milk can, wheels from a two-horse wagon, a wheel from a T-Model Ford, a hand-crank telephone, a sausage grinder, a 10-pound flatiron, shoe lasts, scales for weighing cotton.

"My wife says I never throw away anything."

Brewer and his wife, Mary Alice, 63, whom he married when she was 14, live in a 100-year-old home near their store.

THE COMMUNITY has been bothered by burglars. Brewer rigged up an elaborate alarm system which already has proved to be the undoing of several burglars. Anyone attempting to enter the store at night sets off a siren at Brewer's home. His cash register is rigged to touch off an alarm if opened when he's outside pumping gas.

The Brewers operated a "rolling store" from 1949 until 1974, selling groceries and other items from a converted school bus. Their traveling store plied the rural roads, selling to farm families who lacked transportation to town.

Finally, the Brewers gave it up in 1974.

"People got ways of going," Brewer said.

Mrs. Brewer manages the store, refusing to watch television because "it would take too much of my time."

She recently finished a quilt of 4,000 pieces which she started in 1935 and then put aside.

She turned her hobby of baking cakes into a profitable business and one year made $5,000. "Some weeks I air mail cakes to New York, Florida, Maryland, North Carolina and as far away as California," she said.

"I married her young so I could bring her up right," said Brewer, winking.

WHEN THE LIGHTS went out in Buckhead, Ga. (population 179) recently, Gordon Brewer's country store and service station was the only place in the village with electricity for three days. His lights continued to burn, he could still pump gas and his water wheels hardly missed a turn. Here Brewer, amidst an assortment of junk and used auto parts, starts up one of his four generators.

Barber uses his head—old hair makes good fertilizer

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Hair contains nitrogen. Nitrogen helps plants grow. So why not use hair as fertilizer?

The logic is so simple, barber Bill Black can't understand why anyone hadn't thought of it before.

Working with handicapped persons and children in a three-car garage equipped with a motorized concrete mixer, Black produces small bags of "B. J. Black's FERTHAIRLizer Potting Soil," a mixture that is 1 per cent hair. It's sold in about 20 stores in the area.

Black said hair acts like a sponge — it can absorb materials, then release them over a period of time in needed quantities.

THE STERILIZED HAIR in his potting soil will decompose over a six-month period, Black said, and its proteins and nitrogen will be absorbed through the root systems of plants. The result could turn what is now a useless waste product into a valuable resource.

"Human hair, any hair is a compound of various nutrients that are very desirable for the soil, including nitrogen," a spokesman for the Missouri Botanical Garden said. "There's nothing wrong with that. That man's idea is very good. It's a slow-release arrangement and a good food."

"This could help humanity, especially in foreign countries where the soil is poor," Black said. "They're starving because of low-protein diets. They've got the hair and the soil and they've got people dying."

Black collects hair daily from other beauty salons and barber shops that otherwise would pay to have the hair hauled away.

"THERE'S NOTHING cheaper than to take something out of the trash can," Black said.

Then it is sterilized, a vital part of the process. "Unkissed persons should not handle hair because they may be transferring disease. It has to be sterilized. They can put their own hair or their children's hair in the garden, but they shouldn't get it from the barber shop floor."

Most of Black's customers are happy their hair is useful after it leaves their head. "A lot of people like the idea of reincarnation," Black said, "their hair living on someone else's plant."

Norwegian town wishes oil boom never happened

by GREGORY JENSEN

STAVANGER, Norway (UPI) — These are tense days in an oil boom town which wishes the boom had never happened.

During the last week of April this spruce, lovely old town lived in agony, gripped by fear that an oil well gushing out of control offshore would wash a tide of black, sticky, smelly goo into its breathtaking fjords.

"We did much praying," said Magne Risa, 27.

"When they got the well stopped, everybody where I live rushed out and hoisted their Norwegian flags."

With the capping of the runaway well, Stavanger's tensions did not end. Only the focus changed, as the town prepared for the great debate on future Norwegian oil policy.

THE FEAR NOW is that the policy will be to expand, bringing more money, more jobs, more construction, more prosperity to Stavanger.

Such a prospect would delight most towns. Most towns are not Stavanger.

"People here don't talk about the oil business very much," said a local newspaperman. "But they don't like it."

Ten years ago Stavanger was a beautiful backwater. It lived on fish and farms. Its people were true Norsemen — taciturn but friendly, rugged but gentle, deeply traditional, devoutly Lutheran, instinctively conservative.

Then came North Sea oil.

Today Stavanger is Norway's fourth largest city, its busiest port. Despite rival claims from Aberdeen, Scotland, this is the oil capital of the North Sea.

"This was an agricultural area before," said Risa, a student of sociology at the Stavanger Sessalsko. "Now it is an oil area."

This does not mean a decade of explosive oil boom has transformed Stavanger into a miniature Fort Worth.

IT IS MORE like a cross between Minnesota and New England. Wooden frame houses set wide apart. Granite outcrops breaking through. Lakes all over town. A horizon of snow-streaked mountains, which combines with fjords poking fingers into the heart of town to produce spectacular sunsets.

There are 2,500 Americans here, many from Fort Worth or oil towns like it. They keep to themselves. Toward them, Stavanger natives are friendly, gentle, and quite, quite separate.

"The biggest problem," said the president of the Stavanger Petroleum Wives club, "is loneliness."

American oil headquarters and installations are kept well out of town.

Stavanger's people would ignore the whole oil business, as they try to do with its structures and its foreigners, if they could. They can't.

"EVERYTHING IS so expensive now," Risa said. "It's especially difficult to get a place to live."

"It's hard for ordinary people to get housing because the oil people can offer so much more money," said Kari Liebleh, a local girl.

People cannot ignore helicopters parading out to sea on regular bus runs. American cars are conspicuous in medieval streets. In the Independence Day parade the biggest marching contingent was from Stavanger's American school.

Just up a magnificent fjord is the site where Statoil, the Norwegian government oil company, is building platforms for the North Sea's biggest oil field. Try ignoring them.

They are the biggest concrete structures ever made by man. Sixteen cylindrical tanks the height of Big Ben, clustered around three concrete columns twice as tall as the United Nations building.

Statoil's headquarters is in Stavanger, like everything to do with Norway's oil. If Norway decides to explore for oil above the 62nd parallel — and that means in the four-fifths of its coastal waters still unexplored — Statoil will "have the main responsibility for the oil operations there."

MORE PLATFORMS, more money, more jobs — and more pressure of every kind — for Stavanger.

Some of the loudest opposition to oil expansion here, as farther north, comes from commercial fishermen.

"There is a refinery on a bay near Stavanger," said Elmar Jansen, 28, a fisherman until oil forced him ashore.

"I fished in that bay. They said no pollution, but we saw after the first months the lobsters disappeared. Crabs got yellow colored. Fish tasted and smelled of petrol (gasoline)."

"Now no one fishes in that bay any more."

"I do not see any real bad signs yet," said Risa, the sociology student.

"People working in the oil business, they are very happy. They get much money."

"Unemployment in 1960 was 1,000 when there were less than 57,000 people in Stavanger," said Lars Gellein, the town's information manager. "Today we have 87,000 people and unemployment is 129."

But Stavanger still secretly wishes the boom had not come, and inwardly dreads the boom booming bigger.

"In three years, maybe four," Risa said. "In a few years, I think bad things will come."

Gov. George Wallace

I could have won in '72: Wallace

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — Five years after he was shot and almost killed, Alabama Gov. George Wallace believes he could have won the presidency if Arthur Bremer's shots had missed.

"I could very well have been the President," Wallace said in an interview marking the anniversary of the shooting. "I think I had an excellent chance in 1972."

Wallace was campaigning in the Maryland primary, which he won the day after he was shot. He won five primaries that year and was leading in popular votes when the shooting eliminated him as a candidate.

The Democratic convention in Miami Beach nominated Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, who represented a wing of the party that most observers believe never would have accepted Wallace and could have kept him off the ticket. Wallace disagrees.

"THE CONVENTION would have been deadlocked," he said. "I think I could have at least gotten on the ticket. McGovern would not have been nominated," he said, conceding it was all "very deep speculation."

Wallace never has accepted the conclusion of investigators that Bremer, an unemployed busboy from Milwaukee, was not part of a conspiracy when he shot Wallace in Laurel, Md., May 15, 1972.

"In my own mind, I don't feel he acted alone," Wallace said. "I have no proof of that."

Wallace's questions centered on where Bremer got the money to follow first President Nixon and then Wallace around the country. The FBI concluded Bremer earned the money in a series of jobs.

"I would have liked to have the attempt on my life investigated a little more fully," he said. Adding he was disappointed the House of Representatives did not choose to investigate his case when it voted to probe the assassinations of President John Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr.

WALLACE WAS paralyzed from the waist down by Bremer's shots and has been confined to a wheelchair since. He privately blames the collapse of his 1976 presidential campaign on the image presented by repeated photos of him being pushed around in his wheelchair.

Wallace said he seldom thinks of Bremer or the shooting. "I'm so busy as governor of the state that it doesn't come to mind," he said. "I have forgiven him anyway. I just hope he's asked for forgiveness."

Bremer is serving a 53-year sentence in a Maryland prison for assault with intent to murder and carrying a handgun with intent to use it to murder.

Wallace, who is ineligible to run for reelection as governor, is preparing to run next year for a U.S. Senate seat now held by John Sparkman, D-Ala., who has not announced whether he will retire or seek another term.

THE ALABAMA governor has concentrated on the subject of crime more than ever since he was shot, and he rarely lets an opportunity go by to denounce judges for being "soft on criminals."

He pushed through the legislature this year a series of bills lengthening already stiff prison sentences for violent crimes.

"I have learned the frailties of human life and human health," he said in discussing the shooting. "It reminds me of the fact that people's lives are taken away from them by thugs who get away with a slap on the wrist. That's barbarism."

Most political observers think Wallace's popularity has slipped in Alabama in the last few years, but Wallace remains confident he will win what may be his final race.

"I don't need any issues to get elected to the Senate," he told a news conference after a reporter suggested his stand on one issue was designed to win votes. "You all know that."

Leaders call conference on fair housing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Top real estate and mortgage banking officials meet with civil rights leaders this week to stop the "yelling and screaming" and join in an unprecedented conference to study voluntary fair housing programs.

In promoting the meeting, officials of the Dept. of the Housing and Urban Development have been frank to say stiff enforcement measures alone never will end housing discrimination against blacks and other minorities.

"Let's face it, we're not going to get enough law enforcement troops," said Lloyd Davis, director of the voluntary compliance office of HUD's Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity section. "We've got to do it with voluntary programs."

DAVIS SAID the three-day conference beginning Wednesday culminates five years of work by his office since it was formed in 1972.

Federal officials hope that during both open and closed door meetings, civil rights groups and government officials can win written commitments from industry groups pledging to promote fair housing. Community groups also will spell out details of programs that have been successful in promoting fair housing.

"For the first time the fair housing people are going to get together at table to negotiate with the industry leaders without all the yelling and screaming by one side against the other," Davis said.

Vance pledges U.S. effort to boost aid to 3rd world

PARIS (UPI) — Secy. of State Cyrus Vance Monday urged a new world order for aid and trade and pledged the Carter administration to step up American efforts to reduce the gap between have and have-not countries.

He called on "other rich nations," including the Communists, to do likewise.

But some Latin American delegates complained Vance was not specific enough. And Peruvian Foreign Minister Jose de la Puente walked out, objecting that delegates were indulging in too much talk and not enough action. The Peruvian delegation remained in the meeting, however.

Addressing the opening session of the three-day North-South conference of the world's rich and poor countries with "a message . . . from my President and from the United States," Vance said, "There should be a new international economic system."

"IN THAT SYSTEM there must be equity, there must be growth, but above all there must be justice. We are prepared to help build that system."

He said, "President Carter will seek from the Congress a substantial increase in the volume of our bilateral and multilateral aid programs over the coming five years."

As a start, Vance told the delegates from the eight richest nations and 19 developing countries the United States is ready "to join with other countries in a special action program of $1 billion to help meet the most acute needs of the world's poorest nations."

In addition, he said, "The Carter administration, subject to Congressional approval, is prepared to devote an extra $375 million over present levels in bilateral aid to the poorest countries."

"We believe the industrialized Communist countries also should increase their development assistance," Vance said. U.S. officials said the Carter administration is willing to do more whether the Communists do or not.

COMMUNIST nations have their own highly politicized aid programs. Previous invitations to join hands with the West have fallen on deaf ears.

Vance said in the past two years U.S. public and private sources have "provided capital transfers to the developing world averaging 1 per cent of our gross national product."

Man lived by wiretap wit

Plot suspected in agent's death

by JAMES V. HEALION

EAST HADDAM, Conn. (UPI)—Master wiretapper Frank Chin was one of 20 persons slain in the past two years in what some federal investigators suspect is an underworld campaign to eliminate government informers.

Chin, a double agent for the Justice Dept., was buried April 23 during a steady drizzle in rural East Haddam, a stone's throw from the rustic hideaway he shared with Liz Moore, the attractive former wife of Robin ("The French Connection") Moore.

Death for Frank Chin came in the garage of his Manhattan apartment building Jan. 20, where he lived with his wife Lenore, a former model. His burial was delayed until the frost-hard ground softened.

CHIN WAS SHOT in the face five times at close range. The murder weapon, a silencer-equipped 22-caliber pistol, supports the government's theory that some of its informers are being eliminated systematically.

Chin, ironically, had given a .22-caliber pistol to a South American secret police chief last December as a good will gesture because the two had just sealed a deal that was to bring Chin a $200,000 windfall.

The quiet and effective weapon is favored by U.S. intelligence agents, as well as by Mob hit men who are sometimes quick to pick up on improved techniques.

Liz arranged the simple burial under a spreading oak, where she and Chin lazed away some idyllic afternoons between his forays into the world of heroin dealers and international intrigue.

"IF YOU'VE GOT to be buried somewhere it might as well be where you've had a good time," Liz said. "He was a wild, gorgeous Chinese. He was so captivating. I fell madly in love with him."

Women attracted to Chin saw him as "a Chinese Anthony Quinn," a macho man for all seasons, a dashing devil-may-care type who sometimes raced along Connecticut's winding roads at 130 m.p.h. in one of his sports cars.

No strong-silent type, Chin was an articulate and witty man whose dinner table conversations at the Gelston House in East Haddam sometimes regaled all within earshot.

IT WAS THE KARATE expert's size that impressed many, including William R. Phillips, the rogue cop who put Xaviera Hollander on the pad, and some corrupt police buddies before the Knapp Commission in 1971.

Phillips told his biographer, Leonard Schecter: "He comes in, a big 6-foot Chinaman . . . Can you imagine, a 6-foot Chinaman?"

Chin was found lying near his mint condition, 6 1/2 liter 1969 Mercedes Benz sedan. One tire was flattened, perhaps deflated deliberately to keep the "Chinaman" in a fixed position for the hit man.

"Or they might have just walked up to him and said they were law enforcement officers, and that would have been that," a law enforcement source said describing ways Chin could have been set up.

NO MONEY was taken. His $400 digital wristwatch and his suede jacket from Abercrombie & Fitch were left undisturbed. A Salem Light cigaret — Chin's brand — was found on his chest.

The women in Chin's life — girlfriend Liz and his wife Lenore who maintain cordial relations — were both initial suspects, Liz says, but once homicide detectives checked the wiretapper's background, they found more people with motives than J-M has tape.

It was Liz who asked the Rev. Robert A. Sargent to include in his grave-side remarks an excerpt from Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." The lines were read softly as mourners, including law enforcement associates of Chin, listened with bowed heads.

"Cowards die many times before their deaths:

"The valiant never taste of death but once.

"Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,

"It seems to me most strange that men should fear;

"Seeing that death, a necessary end,

"Will come when it will come."

Chin was a double-agent who harbored a fierce hatred for heroin dealers. He sometimes made buys and showed up later to testify against the dealers at their trials.

SO WELL DID he gain one wholesaler's confidence, the startled street entrepreneur said, as the trap sprung: "Oh my God! Not the Chinaman!"

As wily as Chin was, he met his match in the man who managed to persuade him in 1972 he was a private investigator from Phoenix, Ariz., looking for Chin's services.

In truth, the Arizona P-I was a Justice Dept. agent with 30 years on the street who "turned" Chin for the government. Once compromised, Chin was called upon from time to time to work undercover for Uncle Sam, work he relished.

"He loved the intrigue, he really did," a friend said.

CHIN HIMSELF plotted downfalls precisely, warning to the progress he was making in one case by telling a friend: "Boy, the guy is coming right into the palm of my hand. It won't be long now."

He even tried to psyche people out through his telephone answering service, commanding, rather than requesting, callers to "Leave your message now!"

Chin was an electronics wizard whose devices enthralled his prospective clients, including "Happy Hooker" Hollander who made him an offer he was able to refuse. He wanted $300 up front and wouldn't take it lying down.

CHIN PERFECTED an extraordinary tonal device, which he said bugged telephones long distances if the user dialed the number and blew into a small harmonica.

He also made microphonic darts that could be shot into exterior walls from distances of 500 feet. And he hand-crafted sophisticated transmitters for the backslides of electrical outlets.

Sometimes he kept the tapes, a thought that occurred to New York City investigators looking for leads after his death. They sped to Connecticut with Lenore and found "a whole bunch at the house", a $52,000 stone cottage bordering the Moosup Reservoir.

CHIN WAS IN BUSINESS to make money and he rarely passed up a chance to do so no matter where he was. His cash register mentality even rang up a "sale" on a tower 25 stories above a Manhattan street when a wealthy East Sider insisted on joining him in adjusting a television antenna. These were the early days when Chin was into television repair instead of electronic snooping.

The man began climbing a rooftop tower with Chin in the lead and suddenly he stopped terror-stricken, unable to move, a victim of acrophobia — the fear of heights that paralyzes.

He pleaded with Chin, a barrel-chested weightlifter, to save him. Chin swung down from the higher rungs, leaned into the distressed man's ear and shouted, "What's it worth?"

Saved, the man wobbled into the apartment and Chin's helper said, "Hey. This guy's loaded. There's money laying all around the joint. Let's grab it."

Chin refused, saying he was a shrewd bargainer, not a thief. The helper settled for three pairs of cashmere socks from a bureau drawer. Chin didn't discuss what he got out of the rescue.

As a teen-ager in Brooklyn during World War II when radios were scarce, high school dropout Chin rebuilt old ones and sold them for new. Sometimes he made more money weekly than his parents did monthly at their small Chinese restaurant.

His father was unimpressed with the son's business acumen. They often argued about his choice of friends, his school conduct, and personal habits in a neighborhood where the phrase "take care of yourself" usually came from a shylock.

"The way you're going," the man from the Old World told his son, "you are going to die by the gun or the knife."

Chin once told a friend: "I think my father was right. I don't think I'll live beyond 50." Frank Chin. Dead at 48.

RAND ROAD & RTE. 83 - MOUNT PROSPECT

Dist. 63 faces dim financial picture for fall

by RENA COHEN

Last year angry parents and teachers stormed meetings of the East Maine Dist. 63 Board of Education, protesting $1 million in budget cuts that eliminated 22 teaching jobs.

Quiet has reigned so far this year, but not because the financial picture is brighter. Instead, there are few programs left to cut and the prospect of the district's first year of deficit spending has forced the board to consider a tax referendum, school closing or sale of district-owned land.

In the past, Dist. 63 had a sufficient financial cushion to cover the difference when expenses outstripped revenues.

THIS YEAR, that cash balance probably will be depleted, leaving an expected $4,728 deficit in the $7.6 million educational fund and a $33,026 deficit in the $908,750 building fund.

The reason, said business manager James E. Bowen, is a drop in state aid.

"Last year, we projected revenues of $7.2 million in the educational fund," Bowen said. "Next year we're projecting $6.4 million. The largest difference is in state aid, which is down $768,000 (from $2.7 million in 1976-77 to $2 million next year) because of declining enrollment and the way we have to estimate state aid for next year."

The district's enrollment May 2, 1976, was 5,584. By the same date this year it had dropped to 5,101, and it is expected to drop by another 200 students by September. Acting Supt. Donald Stetina said. The decline cuts into state aid.

While the district's revenues are shrinking, the tentative $9 million budget for the coming school year tops last year's by more than $500,000. Major new expenses proposed include:

- A 5 per cent salary increase for all district employees — an increment which board of education finance chairman Penny Larson calls unrealistic. Negotiations to determine the actual salary increase are continuing.

- $22,000 for a new administrator who will deal either with special education or personnel. The allocation is partially in response to a management audit which recommended the administrative staff be augmented to relieve the heavy workload in both of these areas.

- $7,200 for a survey recommended to improve relationships between teachers and administrators.

- $7,000 to $8,000 for the services of a private consulting firm searching for a replacement for departing Supt. G. Allan Gogo. The tentative budget, drafted before the firm was hired, includes a $4,000 allocation for the search and will have to be adjusted to the higher figure.

- $15,000 for a data processing system that will be needed for a program-by-program cost breakdown soon to be required by the state.

- Addition of two social workers, two junior high reading teachers and one instructor to teach English as a second language.

While certain items on this "wish list" are subject to change before the budget is adopted June 28, a deficit seems inevitable. Closing a school or (Continued on Page 5)

Ignore edict, study shows

Most hospitals refuse abortions

by PATRICIA MCCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 80 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii,

New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz; Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (83 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters hail it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for higher-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 10 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.

- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.

- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause adverse reactions among some patients.

"REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap opera between classes and even take courses in "sudsoology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and (Continued on Page 10)

Residents return home after smoke bomb attack

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardiner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

Henrici said all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrobot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 9 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Henrici said fragments of the bomb are being analyzed at the state crime lab in Joliet in hopes of determining what type of gas it contained and who set off the device.

Elk Grove Village police would not comment on the incident.

SHATTERED WINDOWS in her second floor apartment serve as a reminder to Kim Chrobot of a smoke bomb that was detonated in the second floor hallway of 216 Washington Square late Sunday. The windows were broken by firefighters to disperse toxic fumes in the building.

Expert buried on cemetery panel

by PAT GERLACH

Even though Avery Wolfrum probably knows more about cemeteries and burial plots than anyone else in Cook County, he says he feels like the stepchild of the three-member county cemetery board.

Wolfrum, 32 N. Quentin Rd., Palatine, was named to the cemetery board when the panel was formed about two years ago.

The other two members — County Board Secy. Michael Igoe, who serves as chairman, and Thomas Beck, county controller — are Cook County officials.

THE CEMETERY BOARD was formed when Cook County officials learned they owned a number of small cemeteries and family burial plots that had been decided to the county by their owners around the turn of the century.

It was largely through Wolfrum's work with the Palatine Historical Society that information about the old cemetery deeds was discovered.

"I raised the question that the cemeteries were obviously uncared for and I thought the (historical) society ought to raise its voice," Wolfrum said.

Wolfrum, a retired teacher, said the interest in cemeteries he inherited from his mother goes back at least 50 years.

"Mother is interested in family things and pioneer families. As a child she taught me to love and respect old cemeteries," he said.

Wolfrum knows most of the Northwest suburban cemeteries practically tombstone by tombstone, but he was startled when County Board Pres. George Dunne called to ask him to serve on the commission.

"I KNEW WHEN I was invited to serve that the very structure of the cemetery board made it an 'insider' thing. I knew I would be outvoted but I had no reason to assume I'd be elbowed out as I have been," Wolfrum said.

He said he was elected board secretary "by process of elimination" after Igoe and Beck had named themselves chairman and treasurer. But Wolfrum said Igoe takes minutes and handles necessary board correspondence.

"I can understand his position as far as administrative things are concerned. He has the facility and the staff," Wolfrum said.

But Wolfrum objects to what he says is Igoe's unilateral cemetery board decisions.

"He (Igoe) does all of the work of the cemetery board and talks about it as if it was his. I get the feeling he's impatient with me because I don't jump when he cracks the whip."

FOR EXAMPLE, several months ago Wolfrum learned accidentally that Igoe had promised the Poplar Creek Historical Society $800 a year for assuming the maintenance of the Grove Family Cemetery, a small plot at the eastern edge of the Barrington Square townhouse development in Hoffman Estates.

Wolfrum objected, saying the plot is the only one in Cook County still being cared for by relatives of the people buried there.

"As long as the family wishes to take care of the cemetery I think they should be allowed to," he said.

Wolfrum says he doesn't object to historical societies taking on fundraising projects, but he pointed out that the Grove Cemetery maintenance could be done by a professional landscaper for far less money.

His main objection was that the decision had been made by Igoe without consulting other members at a cemetery board meeting.

AT THE TIME, Igoe said he realized his error in giving the society approval without consent of the entire cemetery board.

Wolfrum said he has drafted plans for the restoration of several plots that have been all but ignored by his fellow board members.

In the case of a small Palatine Township cemetery, Wolfrum said his plans called for new fencing, which included double gates to allow automobiles to enter the plot.

However, when he heard fencing was being installed, Wolfrum said he went out to inspect the project and found a single smaller gate had been put in.

Wolfrum said his annoyance stems from the other board meetings "hurry to get on with things. They want to go ahead and clear and level without regard to tree stumps and tombstones and other important parts of the cemeteries," he said.

IGOE COULD NOT be reached for comment, but Beck minimized Wolfrum's complaints.

"I really don't know why Avery would feel that way," Beck said Friday.

Beck said Wolfrum has been included in all board deliberations, including a decision to handle cemetery maintenance with federal funds available to Cook County.

He said the federally funded program is being carried out in south suburban county cemeteries where an $80,000 budget has provided eight workers and equipment for the job. Northwest suburban plots, Beck said, are being cared for by a landscaper recommended to the board by Wolfrum.

Although Beck said he did not have the cemetery budget handy, he estimated it at about $150,000 since the board was formed.

"Avery was there when we committed $100,000 to a perpetual care fund and decided to clean up and recondition some of the cemeteries with the other $50,000, even though at $4,500 to $4,700 each, that will take half the budget right there," Beck said.

Beck called Wolfrum a "key" member of the cemetery board because the Palatine resident is "familiar with" the burial plots.

"I have never visited any of the cemeteries but I understand Mr. Igoe has toured them with Avery," Beck said.

increasing the tax levy would help, but both of those options are at least a year away. A school closing is waiting on the recommendations of a citizens committee that will not be appointed until September and a tax increase will bring no money into the district until the 1978-79 year, even if a referendum is held before December.

Even this bleak financial outlook is a blessing to teachers who remember last year's cutbacks, however. Teachers' union president Sue Hendricks said the proposed additions to the teaching staff particularly are encouraging.

"Those positions are very needed," Ms. Hendricks said. "When I came back and told our faculty, I know they were extremely pleased."

MS. HENDRICKS also praised the "spirit of consideration" exhibited by the district in giving early notification to 38 first-year teachers whose contracts might not be renewed.

The district routinely issues letters to all teachers hired under terminating contracts that they might not be rehired in the fall. That way, the district can wait to see how many students have left the district and how many teachers will be released. But in the past, nontenured teachers were often left in quandry until late in the school year.

"They informed the teachers earlier than they had to, and they're not cutting second-year teachers which they've always done in the past," Ms. Hendricks said.

"Last year there were second-year teachers who were thinking of entering into mortgages but felt too insecure to do it. I know some teachers who are extremely grateful this year."

The Wheeling High School band steps out smartly in Monday's Memorial Day parade.

Drumbeat leads way of parade

It began as a muffled drumbeat, echoing down Wolf Road. A young boy stepped off the curb and peered into the distance. "There they are, they're coming," he said.

For the several hundred residents who lined the parade route from Walt Whitman School, 133 S. Willie Rd., to Chamber Park, 131 Wolf Rd., Memorial Day was a time for marching bands and quiet reflection.

They watched as the small parade wound its way through the streets into Chamber Park for a short ceremony in honor of the nation's war dead.

THE PARADE WAS led by an antique car painted red, white and blue and carrying members of Amvets Post No. 66. A U.S. Marine Corps color guard of veterans followed. Various groups, including the Wheeling High School Naval Jr. ROTC, Cub Scout Troop 218, Girl Scout Troops 698-889 and Brownie Troops also marched. Music was provided by the Wheeling High School marching band and the Chicago Connection Drum and Bugle Corps.

Following the parade, the crowd gathered in front of a granite memorial erected in Chamber Park "In honor of Wheeling's veterans, in grateful memory of the people of Wheeling who served in all the wars." Wheeling Village Pres. William Hein delivered the Memorial Day address, speaking of America's legacy of freedom.

"This freedom was won by millions of people who gave their lives since the first pilgrims landed in 1620. They left their homeland in search of peace and freedom and sought refuge in this new country," Hein said.

Hein said the people who have fought and died in the service of their country have "shown the courage and dedication American children have — they fought for freedom."

"To a lot of people, Memorial Day is a day of rest away from the job. For others, it's a day to pay homage to the men and women who gave their lives or had their lives interrupted by serving their country," he said.

Ignore edict, study shows

by PATRICIA MCCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 80 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii,

New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz, Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (89 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters hail it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for higher-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 18 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.

- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.

- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause adverse reactions among some patients.

"REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

"The drug company takes responsi-

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap opera between classes and even take courses in "sudology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and

Villages to meet to discuss boundary by golf course

Wheeling and Buffalo Grove officials tonight will meet to discuss establishing a boundary between the two villages near the Chevy Chase Golf Course.

The meeting is 6 p.m. at the Buffalo Grove Village Hall, 50 Raupp, Buffalo Grove.

Buffalo Grove officials say they will fight Wheeling's efforts to annex 406 acres in Vernon Township, including the 128-acre golf course at 1003 N. Milwaukee Ave. The Wheeling Park District is buying the golf course.

BUFFALO GROVE trustees said allowing Wheeling to annex the area would hinder future attempts by Buffalo Grove to expand its tax base through industrial development. The master plans for both villages call for annexation and development of the land around the golf course. Buffalo Grove is seeking industrial development in that area while Wheeling is planning for a mixture of residential, commercial, and light industry.

Wheeling officials began discussing annexation of the Chevy Chase property last fall. Wheeling Park District residents in March approved a $3.7 million bond issue to purchase the golf course from the William Johnson family.

Terry Zerkle, Wheeling village manager, said annexation of the area depends on whether the village can provide sewer and water service to the area, currently served by the Chevy Chase Water and Sewer Co., a private utility owned by the Johnsons.

BUFFALO GROVE trustees said they have an agreement with Lake County that allows the village to prevent Wheeling from hooking onto the county sewer system. The sewer system in the area does not meet U.S. Environmental Protection Agency standards and would have to be upgraded if annexed.

Buffalo Grove Village Atty. William Raysa said the village's agreement with Lake County has not been tested in court.

The Johnson family, which also owns the land surrounding the golf course, plans to develop several hundred acres as multi-family housing, commercial and light industry uses.

Tombstone expert is odd-man-out on cemetery panel

Rotary to sponsor group for active young adults

A new organization is competing for the time of civic-minded young adults in the Northwest suburbs.

It's called Rotaract, an adjunct to four area Rotary Clubs.

The new organization is sponsored by the Rotary Clubs in Arlington Heights, Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect and Wheeling.

IT WILL MEET at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays at the Lions Park Fieldhouse, 411 S. Maple St., Mount Prospect.

The group is aimed at men and women, ages 18 to 28, who are interested in community and international service.

"The theory behind it is that there are enough people in the Northwest suburbs who are not in school and who have a desire to do cooperative work in an organization, and who want to feel useful," said Norman Elliott, a member of the Mount Prospect Rotary Club and one of the sponsors of the organization.

Rotaract is aimed at the same age group that traditionally has been the domain of the Jaycees. Rotaract, however, is open to women as well as men.

ELLIOTT SAID he does not view Rotaract as a stepping stone to the parent Rotary organization, which limits its membership to male business executives regardless of age.

The Rotary stresses specific rather than ongoing community projects, vocational work and an international project. The Jaycees combines community development with leadership training and stresses management training as well as civic projects.

Randy Melind, an Elk Grove Village Jaycee, sees the new organization as an "acclimating" organization.

For years, he said, "We worked with Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary. When young men were ready to leave the Jaycees, the other organizations would often make either formal or informal presentations to the men in an attempt to interest them in their organizations."

The reasoning was that Jaycees already were acclimated to a service attitude and knew how to anticipate and organize community projects, Melind said.

MOST ORGANIZATIONS such as the Rotary and Lions have a restriction against dual membership, so a young man would have to choose among the organizations.

Melind said this may get even more young adults acclimated and interested in community and civic work and perhaps encourage some members eventually to join the Rotary.

However, it might be several years until a former Rotaract member has gained enough business and professional experience to have an executive position.

Condo residents return after smoke bombing

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

HENRICI SAID all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrobot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 9 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Villages to meet about boundary

Wheeling and Buffalo Grove officials tonight will meet to discuss establishing a boundary between the two villages near the Chevy Chase Golf Course.

The meeting is 8 p.m. at the Buffalo Grove Village Hall, 50 Raupp, Buffalo Grove.

Buffalo Grove officials say they will fight Wheeling's efforts to annex 406 acres in Vernon Township, including

by PATRICIA McCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 90 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii,

New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz, Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (89 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters hail it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for higher-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 18 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.

- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.

- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause adverse reactions among some patients.

REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap opera between classes and even take courses in "sudsology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and (Continued on Page 10)

House-passed bill may mean OK for Rob Roy buy

The Illinois House has passed legislation that could pave the way for Wheeling Township to acquire Rob Roy Golf Course as open space.

While township officials have not officially considered plans to purchase the 200-acre tract at Wheeling Road and Euclid Avenue in unincorporated Wheeling Township, the legislation was suggested by Richard Cowen, the township attorney. The golf course is valued at more than $5 million.

The legislation came on an amendment to another township bill sponsored by State Rep. Penny Pullen, R-Park Ridge.

STATE REP. EUGENE Schlickman, R-Arlington Heights, said he offered the amendment at Cowen's request.

He said the amendment changes the Illinois Township Open Space Acquisition Act to allow all townships in counties with populations of more than 250,000 to acquire open space.

Schlickman said the change in the law, which must still be approved by the Illinois Senate, requires a referendum before land can be acquired.

Cowen said he suggested the legislative action to Schlickman because the present law prohibits townships in counties with more than one million persons to acquire land.

THE PROPOSED legislation also grants township condemnation power for property to be acquired for environmental or open space uses.

While declining to confirm whether township officials are considering seriously a move to acquire Rob Roy, Cowen said the legislative action means "that might be a possibility, but generally I wanted to see township government get the broader power."

Other key township officials such as Supervisor Ethel Kolerus and Trustees Jack Gilligan and William Reid were not available for comment on the acquisition. Gilligan is chairman of a group searching for a way to buy the property.

The legislative action appears to be the latest step in a long struggle to preserve the property as open space.

A COALITION of local government units has been working on strategies to obtain the property and a $3,500 grant from Wheeling Township in April to finance the effort.

"I don't know if the strategy is to have the township acquire the land," said Terry Mongoven, president of the Prospect Heights Improvement Assn. and a member of a steering committee studying the problem.

The funds will be used to study existing leisure and recreational facilities.

The steering committee was formed after Centex Homes Inc. failed to obtain rezoning for the property to allow development of more than 500 homes and the Cook County Board denied a request by Prospect Heights for a grant to purchase the property.

Grave expert odd-man-out on county cemetery panel

by PAT GERLACH

Even though Avery Wolfrum probably knows more about cemeteries and burial plots than anyone else in Cook County, he says he feels like the stepchild of the three-member county cemetery board.

Wolfrum, 32 N. Quentin Rd., Palatine, was named to the cemetery board when the panel was formed about two years ago.

The other two members — County Board Secy. Michael Igoe, who serves as chairman, and Thomas Beck, county comptroller — are Cook County officials.

THE CEMETERY BOARD was formed when Cook County officials learned they owned a number of small cemeteries and family burial plots that had been deeded to the county by their owners around the turn of the century.

It was largely through Wolfrum's work with the Palatine Historical Society that information about the old cemetery deeds was discovered.

"I raised the question that the cemeteries were obviously uncared for and I thought the (historical) society ought to raise its voice," Wolfrum said.

Wolfrum, a retired teacher, said the interest in cemeteries he inherited from his mother goes back at least 50 years.

"Mother is interested in family things and pioneer families. As a child she taught me to love and respect old cemeteries," he said.

Wolfrum knows most of the Northwest suburban cemeteries practically by tombstone, but he was startled when County Board Pres. George Duane called to ask him to serve on the commission.

"I KNEW WHEN I was invited to serve that the very structure of the cemetery board made it an 'insider' thing. I knew I would be outvoted but I had no reason to assume I'd be elbowed out as I have been," Wolfrum said.

He said he was elected board secretary "by process of elimination" after Igoe and Beck had named themselves chairman and treasurer. But Wolfrum said Igoe takes minutes and handles necessary board correspondence.

"I can understand his position as far as administrative things are concerned. He has the facility and the staff," Wolfrum said.

But Wolfrum objects to what he says is Igoe's unilateral cemetery board decisions.

"He (Igoe) does all of the work of the cemetery board and talks about it as if it was his. I get the feeling he's impatient with me because I don't jump when he cracks the whip."

FOR EXAMPLE, several months ago Wolfrum learned accidentally that Igoe had promised the Poplar Creek Historical Society $800 a year for assuming the maintenance of the Grove Family Cemetery, a small plot at the eastern edge of the Barrington Square townhouse development in Hoffman Estates.

Wolfrum objected, saying the plot is the only one in Cook County still being cared for by relatives of the people buried there.

"As long as the family wishes to take care of the cemetery I think they should be allowed to," he said.

Wolfrum says he doesn't object to historical societies taking on fund-raising projects, but he pointed out that the Grove Cemetery maintenance could be done by a professional landscaper for far less money.

His main objection was that the decision had been made by Igoe without consulting other members at a cemetery board meeting.

AT THE TIME, Igoe said he realized his error in giving the society approval without consent of the entire cemetery board.

Wolfrum said he has drafted plans for the restoration of several plots that have been all but ignored by his fellow board members.

In the case of a small Palatine Township cemetery, Wolfrum said his plans called for new fencing, which included double gates to allow automobiles to enter the plot.

However, when he heard fencing was being installed, Wolfrum said he went out to inspect the project and found a single small gate had been put in.

Wolfrum said his annoyance stems from the other board meetings "hurry to get on with things. They want to go ahead and clear and level without regard to tree stumps and tombstones and other important parts of the cemeteries," he said.

IGOE COULD NOT be reached for comment, but Beck minimized Wolfrum's complaints.

"I really don't know why Avery would feel that way," Beck said Friday.

Beck said Wolfrum has been included in all board deliberations, including a decision to handle cemetery maintenance with federal funds available to Cook County.

He said the federally funded program is being carried out in south-suburban county cemeteries where an $80,000 budget has provided eight workers and equipment for the job. Northwest suburban plots, Beck said, are being cared for by a landscaper recommended to the board by Wolfrum.

Although Beck said he did not have the cemetery budget handy, he estimated it at about $150,000 since the board was formed.

"Avery was there when we committed $100,000 to a perpetual care fund and decided to clean up and recondition some of the cemeteries with the other $50,000, even though at $4,500 to $4,700 each, that will take half the budget right there," Beck said.

Beck called Wolfrum a "key" member of the cemetery board because the Palatine resident is "familiar with" the burial plots.

"I have never visited any of the cemeteries but I understand Mr. Igoe has toured them with Avery," Beck said.

Villages to discuss new boundary the 128-acre golf course at 1003 N. Milwaukee Ave. The Wheeling Park District is buying the golf course.

BUFFALO GROVE trustees said allowing Wheeling to annex the area would hinder future attempts by Buffalo Grove to expand its tax base through industrial development. The master plans for both villages call for annexation and development of the land around the golf course. Buffalo Grove is seeking industrial development in that area while Wheeling is planning for a mixture of residential, commercial, and light industry.

Wheeling officials began discussing annexation of the Chevy Chase property last fall. Wheeling Park District residents in March approved a $3.7 million bond issue to purchase the golf course from the William Johnson family.

Terry Zerkle, Wheeling village manager, said annexation of the area depends on whether the village can provide sewer and water service to the area. Currently served by the Chevy Chase Water and Sewer Co., a private utility owned by the Johnsons.

BUFFALO GROVE trustees said they have an agreement with Lake County that allows the village to prevent Wheeling from hooking onto the county sewer system. The sewer system in the area does not meet U.S. Environmental Protection Agency standards and would have to be upgraded if annexed.

Buffalo Grove Village Atty. William Raysa said the village's agreement with Lake County has not been tested in court.

The Johnson family, which also owns the land surrounding the golf course, plans to develop several hundred acres as multi-family housing, commercial and light industry uses.

Village to auction bicycles on June 4

The Buffalo Grove Police Dept. will sponsor a special auction of abandoned and unclaimed bicycles and miscellaneous property Saturday at the municipal building, 50 Raupp Dr.

The sale, scheduled from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., is the first of its kind in Buffalo Grove, in which goods other than bicycles will be sold, Sgt. Arthur Voigt said.

Besides a number of bikes offered for sale, Voigt said items such as a movie projector and motorcycle helmets will be auctioned.

"Persons have until 5 p.m. June 3 to claim any property being held by police," Voigt said. "Persons must provide proof of ownership before any materials will be released."

All materials to be auctioned will be open for public inspection from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. June 3.

All children must be accompanied by an adult at the sale, Voigt said. None of the property is guaranteed, he said. Proceeds from the sale will be returned to the village.

Mosquito abatement to begin Thursday

The Buffalo Grove Dept. of Public Works will begin the annual mosquito abatement program Thursday in the Lake County portion of Buffalo Grove.

The program will consist of fogging with Malathion between 8 p.m. and midnight. The fogging will usually be done on Thursdays. The mosquito abatement program will continue through Sept. 29.

The mosquito abatement program in the Cook County portion of Buffalo Grove will be handled by the Northwest Mosquito Abatement District.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.

- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.

- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause adverse reactions among some patients.

"REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

"The drug company takes responsibility," he says.

Pharmacists wary of state bill

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Zimmba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap operas between classes and even take courses in "sudology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

Grave expert odd-man-out on county cemetery panel

by PAT GERLACH

Even though Avery Wolfrum probably knows more about cemeteries and burial plots than anyone else in Cook County, he says he feels like the stepchild of the three-member county cemetery board.

Wolfrum, 32 N. Quentin Rd., Palatine, was named to the cemetery board when the panel was formed about two years ago.

The other two members — County Board Secy. Michael Igoe, who serves as chairman, and Thomas Beck, county comptroller — are Cook County officials.

THE CEMETERY BOARD was formed when Cook County officials learned they owned a number of small cemeteries and family burial plots that had been deeded to the county by their owners around the turn of the century.

It was largely through Wolfrum's work with the Palatine Historical Society that information about the old cemetery deeds was discovered.

"I raised the question that the cemeteries were obviously uncared for and I thought the (historical) society ought to raise its voice," Wolfrum said.

Wolfrum, a retired teacher, said the interest in cemeteries he inherited from his mother goes back at least 50 years.

"Mother is interested in family things and pioneer families. As a child she taught me to love and respect old cemeteries," he said.

Wolfrum knows most of the Northwest suburban cemeteries practically tombstone by tombstone, but he was startled when County Board Pres. George Dunne called to ask him to serve on the commission.

"I KNEW WHEN I was invited to serve that the very structure of the cemetery board made it an 'insider' thing. I knew I would be outvoted but I had no reason to assume I'd be outvoted as I have been," Wolfrum said.

He said he was elected board secretary "by process of elimination" after Igoe and Beck had named themselves chairman and treasurer. But Wolfrum said Igoe takes minutes and handles necessary board correspondence.

"I can understand his position as far as administrative things are concerned. He has the facility and the staff," Wolfrum said.

But Wolfrum objects to what he says is Igoe's unilateral cemetery board decisions.

"He (Igoe) does all of the work of the cemetery board and talks about it as if it was his. I got the feeling he's impatient with me because I don't jump when he cracks the whip."

FOR EXAMPLE, several months ago Wolfrum learned accidentally that Igoe had promised the Poplar Creek Historical Society $800 a year for assuming the maintenance of the Grove Family Cemetery, a small plot at the eastern edge of the Barrington Square townhouse development in Hoffman Estates.

Wolfrum objected, saying the plot is the only one in Cook County still being cared for by relatives of the people buried there.

"As long as the family wishes to take care of the cemetery I think they should be allowed to," he said.

Wolfrum says he doesn't object to historical societies taking on fund-raising projects, but he pointed out that the Grove Cemetery maintenance could be done by a professional landscaper for far less money.

His main objection was that the decision had been made by Igoe without consulting other members at a cemetery board meeting.

AT THE TIME, Igoe said he realized his error in giving the society ap-

Wolfrum said he has drafted plans for the restoration of several plots that have been all but ignored by his fellow board members.

In the case of a small Palatine Township cemetery, Wolfrum said his plans called for new fencing, which included double gates to allow automobiles to enter the plot.

However, when he heard fencing was being installed, Wolfrum said he went out to inspect the project and found a single smaller gate had been put in.

Wolfrum said his annoyance stems from the other board meetings "hurry to get on with things. They want to go ahead and clear and level without regard to tree stumps and tombstones and other important parts of the cemeteries," he said.

IGOE COULD NOT be reached for comment, but Beck minimized Wolfrum's complaints.

"I really don't know why Avery would feel that way," Beck said Friday.

Beck said Wolfrum has been included in all board deliberations, including a decision to handle cemetery maintenance with federal funds available to Cook County.

He said the federally funded program is being carried out in south suburban county cemeteries where an $80,000 budget has provided eight workers and equipment for the job. Northwest suburban plots, Beck said, are being cared for by a landscaper recommended to the board by Wolfrum.

Although Beck said he did not have the cemetery budget handy, he estimated it at about $150,000 since the board was formed.

"Avery was there when we committed $100,000 to a perpetual care fund and decided to clean up and recondition some of the cemeteries with the other $50,000, even though at $1,500 to $4,700 each, that will take half the budget right there," Beck said.

Rotary to sponsor group for active young adults

A new organization is competing for the time of civic-minded young adults in the Northwest suburbs.

It's called Rotaract, an adjunct to four area Rotary Clubs.

The new organization is sponsored by the Rotary Clubs in Arlington Heights, Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect and Wheeling.

IT WILL MEET at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays at the Lions Park Fieldhouse, 411 S. Maple St., Mount Prospect.

The group is aimed at men and women, ages 18 to 28, who are interested in community and international service.

"The theory behind it is that there are enough people in the Northwest suburbs who are not in school and who have a desire to do cooperative work in an organization, and who want to feel useful," said Norman Elliott, a member of the Mount Prospect Rotary Club and one of the sponsors of the organization.

Rotaract is aimed at the same age group that traditionally has been the domain of the Jaycees. Rotaract, however, is open to women as well as men.

ELLIOTT SAID he does not view Rotaract as a stepping stone to the parent Rotary organization, which limits its membership to male business executives regardless of age.

The Rotary stresses specific rather than ongoing community projects, vocational work and an international project. The Jaycees combines community development with leadership training and stresses management training as well as civic projects. Randy Melind, an Elk Grove Village Jaycee, sees the new organization as an "acclimating" organization.

For years, he said, "We worked with Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary. When young men were ready to leave the Jaycees, the other organizations would often make either formal or informal presentations to the men in an attempt to interest them in their organizations."

The reasoning was that Jaycees already were acclimated to a service attitude and knew how to anticipate and organize community projects, Melind said.

MOST ORGANIZATIONS such as the Rotary and Lions have a restriction against dual membership, so a young man would have to choose among the organizations.

Melind said this may get even more young adults acclimated and interested in community and civic work and perhaps encourage some members eventually to join the Rotary.

However, it might be several years until a former Rotaract member has gained enough business and professional experience to have an executive position.

Four assistant principals named

Four new assistant principals have been named in High School Dist. 211.

Edward Bisantz, activities director at Conant High School, 700 E. Cougar Tr., Hoffman Estates, will become an assistant principal there. His salary will be $19,400.

He replaces Doris Haack, who was named assistant principal in 1976. Ms. Haack has resigned but will remain in the district.

Dennis Garber, a science teacher at Schaumburg High School, 1100 W. Schaumburg Rd., Schaumburg, has been promoted to assistant principal there. He will be paid $20,400 a year. He replaces William Bailey, who was granted a sabbatical leave several months ago.

JOSEPH KEENAN, a math teacher at Schaumburg, has been appointed assistant principal at Palatine High School, 150 E. Wood St., Palatine. His salary will be $20,400 a year.

Keenan replaces Dennis Douglas, who has been assistant principal at Palatine High since 1976. Douglas said he is returning to the classroom and will teach business courses at Hoffman Estates High School, 1100 W. Higgins Rd., Hoffman Estates.

Frank Kisko, Conant High reading teacher, will become assistant principal at Hoffman Estates High School at a salary of $19,400 a year.

Sesko replaces Robert Ulbrich, who resigned to start his own business Ulbrich has been assistant principal since 1974.

All new appointments are effective July 1.

Ignore edict, study shows

Most hospitals refuse abortions

by PATRICIA McCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 80 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii,

New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz, Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (83 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters had it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for higher-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 18 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

Residents return home after smoke bomb attack

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

HENRICI SAID all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrobot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 9 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Henrici said fragments of the bomb are being analyzed at the state crime lab in Joliet in hopes of determining what type of gas it contained and who set off the device.

Elk Grove Village police would not comment on the incident.

Loyalty to country theme accents holiday speeches

Schaumburg Village Pres. Raymond Kessell Monday contrasted the "strength of character" shown by a twice-enlisted immigrant Civil War soldier with modern Americans who have fled to foreign countries seeking "asylum and relief" from military service.

Kessell spoke at Schaumburg Township Memorial Day services at St. Peter Lutheran Cemetery, 208 E. Schaumburg Rd. Civil War soldier Christian Niemeyer and 10 veterans of later wars are buried in the church plot.

About 30 persons attended the ceremony sponsored by Schaumburg Rotary Club and American Legion Post 1939.

KESSELL TOLD of Niemeyer, of the Fourth Missouri Cavalry, who although injured in battle and left for dead, recovered and returned home only to reenlist when he learned the Civil War had not ended.

"Actions of this type may be considered of the highest calling, yet we have seen others shy away, turning to foreign countries rather than face service. Let us fall on our knees and thank God for people like Christian Niemeyer and the strength of character he exhibited which has made us what we really are today," Kessell said.

Another principal speaker, Hoffman Estates Pres. Virginia M. Hayter, picked up the theme of Kessell's speech.

Mrs. Hayter said the philosophy behind the mandatory military draft was never discussed when the practice was abolished because some politicians "were uncomfortable because the topic was 'unpopular.'"

"It was never considered necessary to ask if some men and women wanted the draft and wanted to serve out of love of their country and a desire to live a different type of life," she said.

MEMBERS OF THE Hoffman Estates Boys Club presented the pledge of allegiance to the flag. The Rev. John R. Sternberg, pastor of St. Peter's Church, and the Rev. Curt Gerald, of Prince of Peace Lutheran Church, Hoffman Estates, also participated.

U.S. Army Air Force Col. George Bones of Schaumburg, read Gen. John Logan's order creating Memorial Day after the Civil War had ended.

Melvin Timmons of the American Legion post, served as master of ceremonies. Timmons is a former Hoffman Estates trustee. Both he and the Rev. Sternberg also are Rotary Club members.

A parade which has been part of the Memorial Day celebration for several years was not part of the festivities Monday because organizers of the event were unable to obtain either a marching drum and bugle corps or high school band.

Liaison cop program to continue

The Hoffman Estates Police Department's experimental community liaison officer program will continue this summer with a "strong possibility" it will become a permanent fixture.

Lt. Robert Manning, who is in charge of the program, also said the concept probably will be expanded next fall with the liaison officer organizing neighborhood meetings.

The program is intended to increase citizen involvement by having a policeman go door-to-door to discuss neighborhood problems with residents.

THE TEST PROGRAM began part-time last December. In February, Patrolman Dennis Jones, who is the department's "Officer Friendly" in the schools, worked as the liaison officer full-time for about four weeks.

Since then, he has split time between that role and his role in the schools. With the school year nearing an end this week, Jones will return full-time to the liaison work through the summer.

Although the program has received "only favorable comments," Manning said, it is difficult to evaluate.

"We really don't know what the results are. It's hard to tell what the effects are," he said. "We get it piecemeal. We do get feedback, but it's hard to put factual statistics on it."

The only methods the department has to evaluate the program, he said, are reports filed regularly by Jones and calls citizens make informing detectives of suspicious activities or crimes.

AS HE MAKES his rounds, Jones encourages residents to phone detectives about anything suspicious, and Manning said detectives routinely ask persons who phone what prompted their calls in an attempt to see whether they are related to the liaison officer program.

Citizen involvement, he said, is the "first priority" of the program although it serves other functions as well.

"It's good public relations to get out and see the people," Manning said. He said no statistics are available on the number of calls police have received because of the program.

Manning said it is "a strong possibility" and a "70 to 80 per cent certainty" that the program will be adopted by the department on a permanent basis.

THIS SUMMER, Jones will complete knocking on doors in neighborhoods of the village that have not been contacted.

After the entire village is contacted, however, Jones will begin a second round of contacts in problem areas and also will organize neighborhood gatherings to talk with groups about problems in their areas.

That work is not expected to come before the fall, however.

As the program was conceived, there had been discussion of different officers assigned to specific sections of the village and in the recent village election campaign, some candidates had advocated eventually enlarging the program to include as many as five liaison officers.

However, Manning said no funds have been set aside for that kind of expansion this year and that in order to do that, the department would have to cut into the manpower used for street patrol.

historical societies taking on fundraising projects, but he pointed out that the Grove Cemetery maintenance could be done by a professional landscaper for far less money.

His main objection was that the decision had been made by Igoe without consulting other members at a cemetery board meeting.

AT THE TIME, Igoe said he realized his error in giving the society approval without consent of the entire cemetery board.

Wolfrum said he has drafted plans for the restoration of several plots that have been all but ignored by his fellow board members.

In the case of a small Palatine Township cemetery, Wolfrum said his plans called for new fencing, which included double gates to allow automobiles to enter the plot.

However, when he heard fencing was being installed, Wolfrum said he went out to inspect the project and found a single smaller gate had been put in.

Wolfrum said his annoyance stems from the other board meetings "hurry to get on with things. They want to go ahead and clear and level without regard to tree stumps and tombstones and other important parts of the cemeteries," he said.

IGOE COULD NOT be reached for comment, but Beck minimized Wolfrum's complaints.

"I really don't know why Avery would feel that way," Beck said Friday.

Beck said Wolfrum has been included in all board deliberations, including a decision to handle cemetery maintenance with federal funds available to Cook County.

He said the federally funded program is being carried out in south suburban county cemeteries where an $80,000 budget has provided eight workers and equipment for the job. Northwest suburban plots, Beck said, are being cared for by a landscaper recommended to the board by Wolfrum.

Although Beck said he did not have the cemetery budget handy, he estimated it at about $150,000 since the board was formed.

"Avery was there when we committed $100,000 to a perpetual care fund and decided to clean up and recondition some of the cemeteries with the other $50,000, even though at $4,500 to $4,700 each, that will take half the budget right there," Beck said.

Beck called Wolfrum a "key" member of the cemetery board because the Palatine resident is "familiar with" the burial plots.

"I have never visited any of the cemeteries but I understand Mr. Igoe has toured them with Avery," Beck said.

Rotary to sponsor group for active young adults

A new organization is competing for the time of civic-minded young adults in the Northwest suburbs.

It's called Rotaract, an adjunct to four area Rotary Clubs.

The new organization is sponsored by the Rotary Clubs in Arlington Heights, Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect and Wheeling.

IT WILL MEET at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays at the Lions Park Fieldhouse, 411 S. Maple St., Mount Prospect.

The group is aimed at men and women, ages 18 to 28, who are interested in community and international service.

"The theory behind it is that there are enough people in the Northwest suburbs who are not in school and who have a desire to do cooperative work in an organization, and who want to feel useful," said Norman Elliott, a member of the Mount Prospect Rotary Club and one of the sponsors of the organization.

Rotaract is aimed at the same age group that traditionally has been the domain of the Jaycees. Rotaract, however, is open to women as well as men.

ELLIOTT SAID he does not view Rotaract as a stepping stone to the parent Rotary organization, which limits its membership to male business executives regardless of age.

The Rotary stresses specific rather than ongoing community projects, vocational work and an international project. The Jaycees combines community development with leadership training and stresses management training as well as civic projects. Randy Melind, an Elk Grove Village Jaycee, sees the new organization as an "acclimating" organization.

For years, he said, "We worked with Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary. When young men were ready to leave the Jaycees, the other organizations would often make either formal or informal presentations to the men in an attempt to interest them in their organizations."

The reasoning was that Jaycees already were acclimated to a service attitude and knew how to anticipate and organize community projects, Melind said.

MOST ORGANIZATIONS such as the Rotary and Lions have a restriction against dual membership, so a young man would have to choose among the organizations.

Melind said this may get even more young adults acclimated and interested in community and civic work and perhaps encourage some members eventually to join the Rotary.

However, it might be several years until a former Rotaract member has gained enough business and professional experience to have an executive position.

Grave expert is odd-man-out on cemetery panel

by PAT GERLACH

Even though Avery Wolfrum probably knows more about cemeteries and burial plots than anyone else in Cook County, he says he feels like the stepchild of the three-member county cemetery board.

Wolfrum, 32 N. Quentin Rd., Palatine, was named to the cemetery board when the panel was formed about two years ago.

The other two members — County Board Secy. Michael Igoe, who serves as chairman, and Thomas Beck, county comptroller — are Cook County officials.

THE CEMETERY BOARD was formed when Cook County officials learned they owned a number of small cemeteries and family burial plots that had been deeded to the county by their owners around the turn of the century.

It was largely through Wolfrum's work with the Palatine Historical Society that information about the old cemetery deeds was discovered.

"I raised the question that the cemeteries were obviously uncared for and I thought the (historical) society ought to raise its voice," Wolfrum said.

Wolfrum, a retired teacher, said the interest in cemeteries he inherited from his mother goes back at least 50 years.

"Mother is interested in family things and pioneer families. As a child she taught me to love and respect old cemeteries," he said.

Wolfrum knows most of the Northwest suburban cemeteries practically tombstone by tombstone, but he was startled when County Board Pres. George Dunne called to ask him to serve on the commission.

"I KNEW WHEN I was invited to serve that the very structure of the cemetery board made it an 'insider' thing. I knew I would be outvoted but I had no reason to assume I'd be elbowed out as I have been," Wolfrum said.

He said he was elected board secretary "by process of elimination" after Igoe and Beck had named themselves chairman and treasurer. But Wolfrum said Igoe takes minutes and handles necessary board correspondence.

"I can understand his position as far as administrative things are concerned. He has the facility and the staff," Wolfrum said.

But Wolfrum objects to what he says is Igoe's unilateral cemetery board decisions.

"He (Igoe) does all of the work of the cemetery board and talks about it as if it was his. I get the feeling he's impatient with me because I don't jump when he cracks the whip."

FOR EXAMPLE, several months ago Wolfrum learned accidentally that Igoe had promised the Poplar Creek Historical Society $800 a year for assuming the maintenance of the Grove Family Cemetery, a small plot at the eastern edge of the Barrington Square townhouse development in Hoffman Estates.

Wolfrum objected, saying the plot is the only one in Cook County still being cared for by relatives of the people buried there.

"As long as the family wishes to take care of the cemetery I think they should be allowed to," he said.

Ignore edict, study shows

by PATRICIA MCCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 80 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii,

New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz; Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (89 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters hail it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for high-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 18 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.
- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.
- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause adverse reactions among some patients.

"REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name-products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make (Continued on Page 7)

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap opera between classes and even take courses in "sudology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and (Continued on Page 10)

Residents return home after smoke bomb attack

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

$206,799 to cover Dist. 214 pay raises

The High School Dist. 214 Board of Education has set aside $206,799 for merit pay raises for the district's 107 administrators next year. The amount is 7 per cent of this year's total administrative salaries.

Supt. Edward Gilbert will recommend individual raises for administrators based on merit evaluations.

The district's teachers next year will receive an average 8.5 per cent increase, including an automatic increase for an additional year's experience, said Robert Cudney, assistant superintendent for personnel services. The teachers will be in the last year of their two-year contract next year.

Dist. 214 custodians will receive a 6.7 per cent salary increase effective July 1 under the terms of the final year of their three-year contract.

HENRICI SAID all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrobot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 9 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Henrici said fragments of the bomb are being analyzed at the state crime lab in Joliet in hopes of determining what type of gas it contained and who set off the device.

Elk Grove Village police would not comment on the incident.

SHATTERED WINDOWS in her second floor apartment serve as a reminder to Kim Chrobot of a smoke bomb that was detonated in the second floor hallway of 216 Washington Square late Sunday. The windows were broken by firefighters to disperse toxic fumes in the building.

Rotary to sponsor group for young adults

A new organization is competing for the time of civic-minded young adults in the Northwest suburbs.

It's called Rotaract, an adjunct to four area Rotary Clubs.

The new organization is sponsored by the Rotary Clubs in Arlington Heights, Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect and Wheeling.

IT WILL MEET at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays at the Lions Park Fieldhouse, 411 S. Maple St., Mount Prospect.

The group is aimed at men and women, ages 18 to 28, who are interested in community and international service.

"The theory behind it is that there are enough people in the Northwest suburbs who are not in school and who have a desire to do cooperative work in an organization, and who want to feel useful," said Norman Elliott, a member of the Mount Prospect Rotary Club and one of the sponsors of the organization.

Rotaract is aimed at the same age group that traditionally has been the domain of the Jaycees. Rotaract, however, is open to women as well as men.

ELLIOTT SAID he does not view Rotaract as a stepping stone to the parent Rotary organization, which limits its membership to male business executives regardless of age.

The Rotary stresses specific rather than ongoing community projects, vocational work and an international project. The Jaycees combines community development with leadership training and stresses management training as well as civic projects.

Randy Melund, an Elk Grove Village Jaycee, sees the new organization as an "acclimating" organization.

For years, he said, "We worked with Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary. When young men were ready to leave the Jaycees, the other organizations would often make either formal or informal presentations to the men in an attempt to interest them in their organizations."

The reasoning was that Jaycees already were acclimated to a service attitude and knew how to anticipate and organize community projects, Melund said.

MOST ORGANIZATIONS such as the Rotary and Lions have a restriction against dual membership, so a young man would have to choose among the organizations.

Melund said this may get even more young adults acclimated and interested in community and civic work and perhaps encourage some members eventually to join the Rotary.

However, it might be several years until a former Rotaract member has gained enough business and professional experience to have an executive position.

Neighbors protest plans for condo

by NANCY GOTLER

Left to the quiet peacefulness of the West Campbell Street community in Arlington Heights where they have reared families and spent most of their lives.

But if a developer's plans to raise three homes on the block to build a four-story, 80-unit condominium building go much further, the usually calm Mrs. Csanadi and her neighbors may revolt.

"LET'S FACE it, building a condominium is big business," said Mrs. Csanadi, a retired school principal who taught in Palatine for 43 years. "But what about the people who have spent their lives here. Don't they count?"

Mrs. Csanadi and her husband, Steve, have lived on the block between Ridge and Mitchell avenues at 502 W. Campbell St. since 1929. They don't want to see a construction project alter the quiet neighborhood where they have spent their adult lives.

"It's nothing but blockbusting," she said. "Profiteering of the most base motive. All that will come out of it is that someone will make a million bucks at our expense."

That someone is Chicago developer Ed Dick, who wants village officials to rezone three lots in the center of the block for his project.

"MOST OF the residents' complaints aren't justified," Dick said. "Often they are based on personality and not reason. They complain about the 40-foot height of the project but there are some homes on the street that I'll venture to say are higher than our building will be and nobody ever complained about them."

But Mrs. Csanadi holds fast to her opposition. "There are vacant apartments in Arlington Heights now and all kinds of land available that's already zoned for what he wants. The question is, why put it here?"

Dick said he chose the site because it is near the area included in the village's 30-year plan to ring the central business district with high-rise, multi-family dwellings.

"I'm the first to suggest using this area so I'm criticized for it," he said. "But I only pursued this on the basis that if Arlington Heights spent time and money on its long-range plan, they must have thought it was important."

"WHAT AM I supposed to do?" Dick asked. "Wait 29 years and then start building before the 30-year plan runs out?"

Dick has an option to buy the homes at 411, 413 and 417 W. Campbell St. Their owners could not be reached for comment about why they wanted to sell.

Another neighbor, Anne Lippke, has lived in her 121-year-old home at 412 W. Campbell St. for 34 years. She has vowed to fight Dick's proposal.

"I can assure you there will be organized opposition when the time comes and it goes to the plan commission," Mrs. Lippke said.

"WE ALL LIVE here by choice because it's a charming neighborhood," she said. "When I read about how close-knit Bridgeport (the late Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley's South Chicago neighborhoods) is I can understand because that's the way it is here. People grow up, raise their kids and die right on this block."

The residents fear the already heavily traveled Campbell Street will become more congested with the 120 parking spaces required for an 80-unit project.

Joan Herbst, whose home at 409 W. Campbell St. is three feet from the property line of the proposed condominium, worries about traffic from a driveway just outside her side door.

"My bedroom and bathroom windows face right onto where they want to put the front of the condominium," she said. "Would you like to see four stories of brick 20 feet from your window?"

"They say they will put a retaining wall between our house and the driveway but that would even make things worse," Mrs. Herbst said.

"MY HUSBAND grew up down the street and we moved here 12 years ago because we liked the neighborhood," she said. "But I'm afraid this building will do away with our privacy and lower our property values."

Mrs. Herbst's mother-in-law, Martha, has lived at 512 W. Campbell St. for 42 years and fears the already low water pressure in homes on the block will be worsened.

"I can't get water upstairs now without turning off the water downstairs," she said with a thick German accent. "What will happen if they put a condominium over there?"

"This is a nice neighborhood and I think it's a terrible idea," she said. "I'm against it and I'd do anything not to have it."

Mrs. Csanadi summed up the feelings of her neighbors. "This is just creating a problem for a neighborhood that has never caused the village any problems at all. We don't think that's right and we're going to fight to see that it doesn't happen."

Hospitals ignore edict, refuse abortions: study

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from Planned Parenthood's Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

AN ESTIMATED 1,115,000 abortions were performed in the United States last year, up 8 per cent from the previous year.

Authorities estimated 140,000 to 650,000 other women wanted abortions but could not be served, the report said.

The report, in Family Planning Perspectives, the Institute's journal, showed abortion services remain excluded from 70 per cent of the nation's non-Catholic general hospitals — and more than 80 per cent of the public ones.

Also, in most states, legal abortion services were available in only one or two metropolitan areas. Many women, as a result, had to travel long distances to obtain services.

The report is coupled with a 1975 United States Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare profile of patients, procedures, safety and other legal aspects of abortion.

THE PROFILE shows more abortion patients were young, unmarried and nonwhite in 1975 than in previous years.

It also shows more procedures were performed by vacuum aspiration, the safest method and were at earlier and safer stages of pregnancy.

Other highlights of the study by a team headed by Joy Dryfoos, Guttmacher Institute planning director, include:

- Abortion rates vary from fewer than 1 abortion per 1,000 women in West Virginia and Mississippi to more than 30 in California, Florida, Hawaii, New York, and the District of Columbia.

- Six in 10 abortions now are performed in clinics not associated with any hospital. Dramatic local increases in the abortion rate was attributed to the rise of clinics in Pensacola, Fla.; Peoria, Ill.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Santa Cruz; Jersey City, N.J.; Cleveland, Ohio; and Tallahassee, among other places.

- Among teen-agers below age 15, abortions, 15,000, exceeded births, 12,642.

- Almost nine in 10 abortions (83 per cent) were performed during the first trimester. Nearly one-half were performed at eight weeks or earlier.

- Twenty-six per cent of abortion patients were married.

All come together for parade

It was a day for old soldiers and children too young to realize what all the festivities were about. Yet they came together Monday to parade, give prayer, listen and remember the meaning of Memorial Day.

In Palatine the parade through the downtown was short but full of color, marching bands, flags, floats and hundreds of curious, smiling bystanders applauding along the way.

MARCHING UNITS included the Palatine and Fremd high school bands, the Fremd Vikeettes, Girl Scout and Boy Scout troops, the Palatine Concert Band, the Palatine Fire Dept. and the Palatine Civil Defense.

At Palatine Hillside Cemetery services, James Kissner, parade marshal and Illinois American Legion State commander, said the day was meant to remember people who are under headstones in "far away lands."

The Rev. Sheldon B. Foote, pastor of St. Philips Church, delivered a brief invocation calling on all to remember the meaning of the day.

"FROM THE TIME of Cain and Abel, brothers and sisters and tribes and nations have always been in warfare with each other," he said. "It seems man has never really learned how to get along with each other and the price is paid century after century."

"We have lost many in death through battle but despite that we come once a year to remember with great sorrow those who have departed this life for our country," he said.

The American Legion Post 690 honor guard fired a 15-gun salute in honor of the nation's war dead. American Legion Cmdr. Earl Wesemann and Auxiliary President Lois Delmas placed a wreath at the cemetery's stone marker where dead soldiers are honored. The stone is inscribed "To those who sleep in unknown graves."

The Palatine High School band played "Taps" and the National Anthem and the short cemetery services were finished.

FROM THE CEMETERY the parade marchers continued down Broadway Street past a reviewing stand at Slade Street to the village parking lot at Palatine Road.

It was finished before noon and watchers dispersed in every direction, with children on their bicycles continuing to wave the small, American flags that were passed out to spectators along the parade route.

Scouting the area

IF YOU WERE lucky, you got to ride in Monday's pace during the 1½ hour event. Special services at Memorial Day parade through Palatine's downtown the Palatine Hillside Cemetery included a 15-gun salute. Even without wheels, marchers kept up the salute.

Generic medicine battle heats up

by KURT BAER

Opponents call it "cookbook medicine" and say it will lower the quality of health care in the state.

Supporters hail it as one of the most effective pieces of consumer legislation to come along in years.

The argument is over generic drugs and whether Illinois pharmacists should be allowed to substitute the less expensive generic drugs for higher-priced brand-name drugs prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS have the same chemical make up as brand-name medicines. However, because they do not have advertised trade names, they usually are cheaper.

A bill to legalize generic drug substitution passed the Illinois House recently 137 to 18 and will be voted on soon in the Senate.

"The generic drug substitution bill is one of the strongest pieces of consumer legislation ever to come out of the Illinois House," says State Rep. William A. Marovitz, D-Chicago, the chief sponsor of the bill.

"Basically, we feel there is no cost savings for the consumer, and as for the chemical equivalency of the drugs, it's like comparing coal and diamonds. They're both carbon but certainly not comparable," says Dr. George T. Wilkins, president of the Illinois State Medical Society.

These and other differences of opinion will have to be reconciled in the Senate or the 1977 generic drug substitution bill, like others before it, will go down to defeat.

"IF WE CAN get the bill out of Senate committee, we'll be on our way. The committee chairman has not been in favor of similar bills in the past," Marovitz says.

In its present form, the generic drug law would allow the substitution of equivalent drugs provided:

- The substituted drug is cheaper than the prescribed medicine.

- The substituted drug is included on a list of generic drugs approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health.

- The prescribing doctor and the person taking the drug permit the substitution.

Opponents insist that despite basic chemical equivalency between drugs, subtle differences in the manufacture or quality of generic drugs can cause a diverse reactions among some patients.

"REACTIONS CAN be as delicate as an allergy to particular capsule used to contain the drug. It may sound silly, but it can happen," says Dr. Alfred J. Clementi, chief of the medical staff at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights.

"There is an inherent problem of who is going to be responsible when a generic drug is substituted for a name brand drug and some problem develops with the patient," Clementi says. "The doctor, who prescribed a specific drug, may not even know about the substitution. The pharmacist is not going to want to take responsibility, nor should the patient."

Marovitz says the bill is very specific about liability for damages arising from generic drug substitution.

"The drug company takes responsibility," Marovitz says.

by DEBBE JONAK

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at the Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap opera between classes and even take courses in "sudsology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and

Residents return home after smoke bomb attack

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

HENRICI SAID all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrobot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 9 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Henrici said fragments of the bomb are being analyzed at the state crime lab in Joliet in hopes of determining what type of gas it contained and who set off the device.

Elk Grove Village police would not comment on the incident.

Orcutt resigns library unit seat

James Orcutt, who was elected to the Palatine Public Library Board last year, has resigned because of increased business demands on his time.

Orcutt, 32, of 37 N. Benton St., works with Heindol Commodities of Chicago. He was elected to a six-year term on the board last year.

Orcutt submitted his resignation to the board May 5 during a committee-of-the-whole meeting. He said the resignation was effective immediately.

"Work was taking up more of my time and there were more demands on my time," he said.

Orcutt's VACANCY will be filled by a board appointee who will serve until the next library election in April 1978.

Orcutt served as chairman of the board's finance committee during his one year of service.

Orcutt said he believes the library is facing financial problems, but he believes administrative librarian Andrea Balcken is doing a good job of balancing funds while trying to provide for growth.

"I feel very strongly that she's doing a very good job and I think she's an asset to the district," Orcutt said.

The board may be facing a second vacancy this summer if board member Jean Tundall moves and is forced to resign. Mrs. Tundall, 32, of 1104 Thackeray Dr., was elected to a six-year term on the board last year.

Her husband may be transferred out of state, which will be the reason for her resignation, Mrs. Tundall has said.

Criteria for selection include a man's voluntary service to community, professional leadership, academic and business achievement, cultural accomplishments and civic and political participation.

Residents hope condo is torn down

by BILL HILL

Pigeons and neighbors of Arlington Square agree — the uncompleted condominium development at Rand Road and Ill. Rte. 53 is for the birds.

And for the rabbits, rats, weeds, bricks and other debris left behind when construction of the $13 million project stopped nearly two years ago.

"They ought to tear it down or do something with it. We've had to look at it for 2½ years," said Ed Werner, 1604 Canterbury Ct., whose backyard faces the roofless, boarded up buildings where only security guards work now.

project as unsafe, unsanitary and a public nuisance.

SEVEN MONTHS later Village Atty. Jack M. Siegel asked a Cook County Circuit Court judge to order a cleanup of the site and a trial to condemn the project.

The cleanup, involving boarding windows, fencing off a swimming pool and cutting weeds, eventually occurred, but Siegel never obtained a trial date.

"I should try again, but we may have problems getting action because of the other litigation in federal court," Siegel said, referring to the countersuits still pending between Plato Foutas & Co., builder of Arlington Square, and the First Pennsylvania.

a loan for the project.

"Initially, the reason why the judge didn't want to tear the buildings down was because he couldn't determine who was responsible for the ownership," Siegel said.

First Pennsylvania is suing Foutas for the $3.4 million already loaned to the builder and Foutas is countersuing for $6.3 million he insists First Pennsylvania promised to pay to complete Arlington Square, plus $3 million in damages.

"DOUFAGAT FRIDAY" said he is in "deep negotiations" with the lenders and he expects the project to be completed, either as condominiums or "luxury rentals."

"There's a great feeling that if negotiations are going to be fruitful, they should be completed in the near future so another winter," he said.

Robert Keck, attorney for Foutas, said this week he doesn't expect the suits between the developer and the lenders to go to trial before this fall.

"We're trying to get it out but First Penn is continuously employing delay tactics," he said.

Keck insists the uncompleted buildings no longer constitute a public nuisance.

"It's all boarded up and it's not a threat to anybody," he said.

Neighboring residents disagree.

"IT'S BEEN CLEANED up some, but still, what an eyesore," said Maureen Crump, 1608 Canterbury Ct. "If I had kids I'd be hysterical. I think anything could happen back there."

"It's really a menace for kids. Several times my wife and I have seen kids on the upper floors and on the roof of the one building," Werner said.

As part of the cleanup order last summer, Foutas also was told to have a security guard on duty at the site at all times.

"The only time he (the security guard) has chased people off is when we've gone ice skating on their pond," said Judy Turner, 1616 Canterbury Ct. "Lately I've seen fewer kids going back there, but I wonder if that will change once summer's here," she said.

Only the two lower levels have been boarded up and many of the boards now have fallen out of place.

WILDLIFE THRIVES in the area. Rabbits have destroyed bushes and flowers around the homes on Canterbury Court.

But residents there seem even more concerned about what may be built on the 25-acre site if Foutas is able to complete Arlington Square.

"We'd love to see it torn down, but then we don't know what will go in there," said Mary Jo Valenziano, 1616 Canterbury Ct.

"People feel HUD (U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development) very easily could come in and take it over for low-income housing. I think people who see this area as a long-term place to live are concerned about that economic danger," Mrs. Crump said.

"We don't want to see any federally-supported housing. We would prefer to see the village level it and then buy it and put a park there," Werner said.

Serio to lead township health unit

Palatine Township Trustee John Serio, a critic of the township health and sex counselor, will head up the newly formed health, safety and traffic committee, which will have partial jurisdiction over the controversial program.

At a budget hearing last week Serio voiced opposition to the health counseling program of the Palatine Township Youth Committee, saying — among other things — the counselor does not teach "sexual responsibility."

"Those people are no more qualified to be counselors than you or me," Serio said Friday.

Howard Olsen, township supervisor, made appointments this week to four township committees formed to analyze problems and issues brought before the board.

THE HEALTH, SAFETY and traffic committee will be "responsible for the consideration and review of all matters relating to the services, facilities or programs available or proposed for township residents in the areas of mental, or physical health, public safety and transportation."

Serio said he thought the controversial health counseling program should be considered within his committee, although he said it may "overlap" with the responsibilities of the new social services committee.

Full funding of $14,500 for the health and sex counselor was approved this week by the board despite Serio's opposition. When the program is considered for funding next year, it probably will be evaluated first in Serio's committee. The other members of the health, safety and traffic committee are Trustee Donald Bellm and Highway Comr. Robert Bergman.

Besides the health, safety and traffic committee and the social services committee, Olsen made appointments to the administration and finance committee and the planning, zoning and communications committee.

TRUSTEE LISTON Pennington was named to chair the social services unit, made up of Trustee James Wilson and Assessor Bernard Pedersen.

Wilson will head the administration and finance committee. Other members are Pennington, Clerk Ruth Ellen Blowney and Collector Edward Smith.

The planning, zoning and communications committee will be chaired by Bellm, with members Serio, Bergman and Pedersen.

Though the township has no legal jurisdiction concerning planning and zoning in the township's unincorporated areas, the committee will work to give the township a voice in county planning and zoning.

The social services committee and the health, safety and traffic committee will meet on the first Monday of each month. The other two committees will meet on the third Monday of each month.

The trustees will receive $25 for each committee meeting they attend, with a maximum of two paid meetings per month. The other township officials are salaried and will not receive additional pay. The collector will not receive any per-meeting pay or a salary. The collector's office has been non-functioning since a 1968 Cook County Circuit Court ruling stopped the township from collecting taxes.

Rotary to sponsor group for active young adults

A new organization is competing for the time of civic-minded young adults in the Northwest suburbs.

It's called Rotaract, an adjunct to four area Rotary Clubs.

The new organization is sponsored by the Rotary Clubs in Arlington Heights, Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect and Wheeling.

IT WILL MEET at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Lions Park Fieldhouse, 411 S. Maple St., Mount Prospect.

The group is aimed at men and women, ages 18 to 28, who are interested in community and international service.

"The theory behind it is that there are enough people in the Northwest suburbs who are not in school and who have a desire to do cooperative work in an organization, and who want to feel useful," said Norman Elliott, a member of the Mount Prospect Rotary Club and one of the sponsors of the organization.

Rotaract is aimed at the same age group that traditionally has been the domain of the Jaycees. Rotaract, however, is open to women as well as men.

ELLIOTT SAID he does not view Rotaract as a stepping stone to the parent Rotary organization, which limits its membership to male business executives regardless of age.

The Rotary stresses specific rather than ongoing community projects, vocational work and an international project. The Jaycees combines community development with leadership training and stresses management training as well as civic projects.

Randy Melind, an Elk Grove Village Jaycee, sees the new organization as an "acclamating" organization.

For years, he said, "We worked with Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary. When young men were ready to leave the Jaycees, the other organizations would often make either formal or informal presentations to the men in an attempt to interest them in their organizations."

The reasoning was that Jaycees already were acclimated to a service attitude and knew how to anticipate and organize community projects, Melind said.

MOST ORGANIZATIONS such as the Rotary and Lions have a restriction against dual membership, so a young man would have to choose among the organizations.

Hospitals ignore edict, refuse abortions: study

by PATRICIA McCORMACK
NEW YORK (UPI) — Most of the nation's hospitals, public as well as private, continue to ignore the three-year-old Supreme Court mandate to provide abortion on demand, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America reported Monday.

Catholic hospitals, which for religious reasons refuse abortion requests, were not included in the study of legal abortion in the United States, 1975 to 1976.

"Poor, rural and very young women are most likely to be denied abortions because they are least likely to have the funds, the time or the familiarity with the medical system that they need," said investigators from

Pageantry highlights ceremony

There were no clowns, no drums, no bugles. But the people of Mount Prospect Monday had their own reverent way of saluting the nation's war dead.

The Memorial Day parade was colorful and carried with it the pageantry surrounding most national holidays. It was the absence of flowery floats and marching bands, though, which offered the appropriate solemnity for remembering those who had sacrificed their lives for the country's freedom.

Mount Prospect's VFW Post 1337 color guard led the procession down Emerson Street, stopping briefly to place a memorial wreath of red and white carnations in front of village hall. The veterans were followed by the Mount Prospect Police Explorers, Mayor Carolyn H. Krause, the Lions Club, Camp Fire Girls, Girl Scouts, Brownies, E-Hart Girls, YMCA Indian Guides, Boy Scouts and 4-H Club.

CHILDREN PERCHED atop their fathers' shoulders caught a glimpse of the American flag as several hundred parade watchers saluted Old Glory when the colors filed by. The spectators followed the procession to Lions Park where VFW Post Cmdr. Elroy Pohlman conducted a moving memorial service.

The crowd formed a circle around Pohlman who stood in front of a symbolic gravesite marked by a small white cross on which a green army helmet hung.

He told Memorial Day observers the fenced in tomb symbolized the "hallowed ground" throughout the country where thousands of war dead are buried. "This represents the resting place of so many of our comrades who served in every war," he said.

Mrs. Krause called the nation's 109th Memorial Day observance a "sacred, peaceful day" when people come together recalling, honoring and commemorating the holiday's significance.

"We honor the heroes who fought to make the nation just and free," Mayor Krause said. "They are remembered as heroes, fighters of freedom and as courageous men and women of self-sacrifice. This country and its soldiers have battled for right — not to conquer but for conscience, not for prejudice but for principle."

Heads were bowed and hands covered hearts as the VFW color guard fired a 15-gun salute. Warren Hecht, a sophomore at Prospect High School, played taps. More flowers were placed on the "grave" by local service organizations and another Memorial Day ceremony was history.

A large, carefully lettered sign at a Mount Prospect pharmacy reads, "The value of your prescription cannot be measured only by the cost of the ingredients."

That point was made by many Northwest suburban pharmacists who are wary of a proposed bill in the Illinois legislature that would make cheaper, generic drugs more accessible to the consumer.

The bill would permit pharmacists to substitute the generic drugs for brand-name products prescribed by doctors.

GENERIC DRUGS generally refer to those which have the same ingredients as brand-name drugs but are marketed under a less widely known name.

The pharmacists are not sure the bill would save consumers very much money in the long run — although one pharmacist insisted it could mean a reduction of up to 40 per cent on prescriptions.

Many also are not willing to risk substituting a cheaper, possibly inferior drug made by an obscure company for a more expensive, tried and true brand-name product.

"There are only 10 or 15 good generic items in the market out of 15,000 drugs," said Pete Ziramba, a pharmacist at Mount Prospect Plaza Walgreen Drug Store.

"I know of some makes which I wouldn't use. The quality control is not that good," he said. "I don't think it's fair that the manufacturers of drugs spend time and money to make

Even stars are addicts of soaps

by DIANE MERMIGAS

Some of the most interesting and impressive names on this country's Who's Who list belong to people hooked on soap operas.

They are prominent Americans who have openly admitted their addiction to daytime drama. Comedian Carol Burnett has had several cameo roles on "All My Children," which she confesses is her favorite soap.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall has been known to slip away from the bench long enough in the afternoons to catch the continuing drama of "Days of Our Lives." Artist and filmmaker Andy Warhol and former Texas Gov. and U.S. treasury secretary John Connally are resigned to "As the World Turns" for life. Entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. says he's got it bad for "Love of Life."

ON COLLEGE campuses throughout the country, students swarm the television sets in their student unions to catch up on their favorite soap operas between classes and even take courses in "sudsoology."

Executives conveniently gather for lunch in downtown pubs to munch

french fries while catching glimpses of their favorite soap on a nearby television. Homemakers manage to feed the kids at lunchtime and schedule their chores around the one dramatic escape they look to every afternoon.

But, it has all gone beyond just watching the soaps. Newsstands are lined with a plethora of weekly journals that summarize the latest happenings, just in case fans weren't able to watch during the week and are filled with gossip on the biggest and

Residents return home after smoke bomb attack

Most of the 13 residents of the Washington Square Condominium Apartments returned to their homes Monday following a smoke bomb attack that sent 13 Elk Grove Village firefighters to the hospital.

Firefighters were called to the building at 216 Washington Square at about 9 p.m. Sunday after residents discovered smoke in the hallways. Elk Grove Village Fire Chief John Henrici said the "smoke bomb type device," which gave off a toxic gas, was set on the second floor of the building.

The 13 firefighters were overcome by the fumes as they attempted to clear the smoke from the building. Eight were treated and released at Alexian Brothers Medical Center, Elk Grove Village. Five others were hospitalized and listed in good condition, including Capt. Wayne Singel, Lt. Bernie Gross and firefighters Joe Gardner, Lawrence Ryan and Richard Keyworth.

HENRICI SAID all the firefighters and Gross are expected to be released

Tuesday and that Singel will remain hospitalized for "three or four" more days.

Residents of the building said they had no warning of the smoke bomb attack. Kim Chrobot, who lives on the second floor, said she first learned of the smoke bomb from neighbors who ran throughout the building alerting residents.

"I was just in my apartment and people started banging on the walls and doors to get everybody out. By the time I got out the back way, the place was just filled with smoke," she said.

A RESIDENT OF the first floor, who asked not to be identified, said she was sleeping on the couch when she was awakened by the barking of her dog.

"When I woke up I saw smoke pouring in around the door. I got the dog and my child and got out of the house. I didn't even call the fire department. I was so scared, I just wanted to get my son out," she said.

Another neighbor said he was talking on the phone when he was told by other residents to leave the building.

"I heard nothing — no explosion. There was just very dense smoke," he said.

He said there has been no serious vandalism in the complex but that he had noticed "lots of youngsters" sitting around the pool bathhouse.

THE NEIGHBOR ALSO said he saw a dark car with its parking lights on sitting in front of the building about 9 p.m.

"One man got out, walked in and went upstairs and went back out. He was a tall lad with a jacket. Other than that I don't know what happened."

Henrici said fragments of the bomb are being analyzed at the state crime lab in Joliet in hopes of determining what type of gas it contained and who set off the device.

Elk Grove Village police would not comment on the incident.

SHATTERED WINDOWS in her second floor apartment serve as a reminder to Kim Chrobot of a smoke bomb that was detonated in the second floor hallway of 216 Washington Square late Sunday. The windows were broken by firefighters to disperse toxic fumes in the building.

Special ed jobs offered

Palwaukee Industries, a division of Northwest Suburban Aid for the Retarded, is offering summer jobs for local special education students.

The openings are designed to give students the opportunity to be exposed to a work setting to complement their high school education.

The workshop, 65 E. Palatka Rd., Prospect Heights, employs 70 developmentally disabled adults ages 18 and older. The program offers training and evaluation, fostering vocational growth and independent thinking in an industrial setting.

Information and applications are available by calling 541-5250. Interested persons are invited to tour the facilities.

Expert buried on cemetery panel

by PAT GERLACH

Even though Avery Wolfrum probably knows more about cemeteries and burial plots than anyone else in Cook County, he says he feels like the stench of the three-member county cemetery board.

Wolfrum, 32 N. Quentin Rd., Palatine, was named to the cemetery board when the panel was formed about two years ago.

The other two members — County Board Secy Michael Igoe, who serves as chairman, and Thomas Beck, county comptroller — are Cook County officials.

THE CEMETERY BOARD was formed when Cook County officials learned they owned a number of small cemeteries and family burial plots that had been deeded to the county by their owners around the turn of the century.

It was largely through Wolfrum's work with the Palatine Historical Society that information about the old cemetery deeds was discovered.

"I raised the question that the cemeteries were obviously uncared for and I thought the (historical) society ought to raise its voice," Wolfrum said.

Wolfrum, a retired teacher, said the interest in cemeteries he inherited from his mother goes back at least 50 years.

"Mother is interested in family things and pioneer families. As a child she taught me to love and respect old cemeteries," he said.

Wolfrum knows most of the Northwest suburban cemeteries practically tombstone by tombstone, but he was startled when County Board Pres. George Dunne called to ask him to serve on the commission.

"I KNEW WHEN I was invited to serve that the very structure of the cemetery board made it an 'insider' thing. I knew I would be outvoted but I had no reason to assume I'd be elbowed out as I have been," Wolfrum said.

He said he was elected board secretary "by process of elimination" after Igoe and Beck had named themselves chairman and treasurer. But Wolfrum said Igoe takes minutes and handles necessary board correspondence.

"I can understand his position as far as administrative things are concerned. He has the facility and the staff," Wolfrum said.

But Wolfrum objects to what he says is Igoe's unilateral cemetery board decisions.

"He (Igoe) does all of the work of the cemetery board and talks about it as if it was his. I get the feeling he's impatient with me because I don't jump when he cracks the whip."

FOR EXAMPLE, several months ago Wolfrum learned accidentally that Igoe had promised the Poplar Creek Historical Society $800 a year for assuming the maintenance of the Grove Family Cemetery, a small plot at the eastern edge of the Barrington Square townhouse development in Hoffman Estates.

Wolfrum objected, saying the plot is the only one in Cook County still being cared for by relatives of the people buried there.

"As long as the family wishes to take care of the cemetery I think they should be allowed to," he said.

Wolfrum says he doesn't object to historical societies taking on fund-raising projects, but he pointed out that the Grove Cemetery maintenance could be done by a professional landscaper for far less money.

His main objection was that the decision had been made by Igoe without consulting other members at a cemetery board meeting.

AT THE TIME, Igoe said he realized his error in giving the society approval. Wolfrum said he has drafted plans for the restoration of several plots that have been all but ignored by his when he campaigned earlier this year for reelection. Flores said votes on specific expenditures were so close during preliminary budget hearings it is possible the new board members' votes could change those results.

Flores said the hiring of 17 new employees should be delayed until the new village board ratifies the action taken by the old board. He said there are no signs the village is understaffed.

Included among new positions created by the former board are eight policemen, a village planner, three public works employees, four radio dispatchers for the fire department and an additional worker in the finance department.

Flores and Mrs. Krause have said they support hiring the four radio operators — disabled veterans trained with state and federal funds — by the Mount Prospect fire department to dispatch emergency vehicles to crime and accident scenes.

fellow board members.

In the case of a small Palatine Township cemetery, Wolfrum said his plans called for new fencing, which included double gates to allow automobiles to enter the plot.

However, when he heard fencing was being installed Wolfrum said he went out to inspect the project and found a single smaller gate had been put in.

Wolfrum said his annoyance stems from the other board meetings "hurrying to get on with things. They want to go ahead and clear and level without regard to tree stumps and tombstones and other important parts of the cemeteries," he said.

IGOE COULD NOT be reached for comment, but Beck minimized Wolfrum's complaints.

"I really don't know why Avery would feel that way," Beck said Friday.

Beck said Wolfrum has been included in all board deliberations, including a decision to handle cemetery maintenance with federal funds available to Cook County.

He said the federally funded program is being carried out in south suburban county cemeteries where an $80,000 budget has provided eight workers and equipment for the job. Northwest suburban plots, Beck said, are being cared for by a landscaper.

Wolfrum says he doesn't object to historical societies taking on fund-raising projects, but he pointed out that the Grove Cemetery maintenance could be done by a professional landscaper for far less money.

Hiring freeze before village today

A possible freeze on hiring new village employees during the 1977-78 fiscal year will be discussed tonight at a special meeting of Mount Prospect Village Board.

The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. in the public safety building, 112 E. Northwest Hwy.

Department directors who asked for additional personnel approved by the former village board will review their requests with new board members.

MAYOR CAROLYN H. KRAUSE and Trustee Norma J. Murauskis did not serve on the old village board, which adopted a $12.1 million budget, including expenses for 17 new employees. Both Mrs. Krause and Mrs. Murauskis advocated a curb on village spending during their mayoral and trustee campaigns.

The hiring freeze was proposed by Trustee Leo Flores who also pledged to "hold the line" on village spending
